On whistle from the lodge, or village cock Count the night-watches to hisfeathery dames. Milton.

FEATLY. adv. [from feat.] Neatly; nimbly; dexterously.

Foot it featly here and there And, sweet sprites, the burthen bear. Shaksp.
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

FEATNESS. n. f. [from feat.] Neatness; nicety; dexterity.

FEATURE. n. f. [feature, old French.]

1. The cast or make of the face.

Report the feature of Octavia, her years. Shak.
Any lincament or single part of the face.

Though ye be the fairest of God's creatures,
Yet think that death shall spoil your goodly features. Spenser.

We may compare the face of a great man with the character, and try if we can find out in his looks and features, the haughty, cruel, or unmerciful temper that discovers itself in the history. Addison on Medals.

Though various features did the sisters grace,
A sister's likeness was in every face. Addison.

FEATURE. v. a. To resemble in countenance; to favour.

He liv'd in court most prais'd, most lov'd,
A sample to the young; to th' more mature,

1. Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.

I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it. Woodward.

2. Power of producing or bringing forth.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years; and I have found that melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons. Raf.

God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren, nor being exhausted. Bentley.

FED. The pret. and part. pass. of To feed.

For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
Devoing dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore. Pope.

FE'DARY. n. f. [fedus, Latin, or from feudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakspere, may signify either a confederate; a partner; or a dependent.

Damn'd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless hauble!
Art thou a fedary for this act, and lookst
So virgin-like without? Shakspere's Cymb.

FE'DERAL. adj. [from fedus, Latin.]

Relating to a league or contract.

It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among Jews and heathens, was wont to be. Hammond.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. Grew.

FEE. n. f. [see, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord.

All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other.
Feudum, of fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord.
And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money: yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord,
to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts;
fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee- conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body.
And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowell.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
On fee-simple in his master's name. Hubb. Ta.

Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stay, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakspere.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakspere.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

Thine be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full land;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubb. Ta.
Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I live, what do you promise me? Shaksp.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shak.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not refuse doing a good office for a man because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each estate their property fees. Tusser.

FE'FARM. n. f. [fee and farm.] Tenure
by which lands are held of a superior lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in fe'farm, which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was posses'd with fear. Davies.

They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears

Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakespeare.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FE'ELING. n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd;
That she might look at will through every pore?
Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shak.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparring and compassionate towards his subjects.

Bacon's Henry VII.
Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.

Bacon's Essays.
As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FE'ELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

drus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy pang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shaksp.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.

Whose passions and whole plots have broke their sleep,

To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a bait,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
Let since pursue me. Shakespeare.

I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Lybian plain. Pope.

Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, *fell*est of the fell. Thomson.

FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin;
the hide. Not used.

Wipe thine eye;
The gonjers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare.

The time has been my senses would have soot'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of air
Would at a dismal trundle route and stir. Shak.

To FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shak.

His limbs all cover'd with a thinning scale. Dryd.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a tanner that would fell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell.
Hubbard's Tale.

Proud Alcide and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their saulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
These seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.

FELL. The preterit of To fall.

None on their feet might stand, Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell

By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FE'LLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Isaiah.

FEL'FLUOUS. adj. [fel and flu, Lat.]

FE'LLMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FE'LLNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty;
savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood trail,
Adown so fast, and all his armour sleep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. Fairfax.

FEL

FELLOS. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or filly.

Out, out, thou trumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n.
Shakespeare.

Axe-trees, naves, fellies and spokes were all molten.
King.

FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Minshew; from fe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we comfort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.
Shakspeare's Tempest.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love?
Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal sabuck mounts the walls.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey.
Waller.
A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows.
L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants.
Sida. y.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now.
Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice;
the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.
Addison's Spectator.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.
Shakspeare.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns.
Bacon.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fat maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men.
Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands.
Sidney.

Calisto hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodrigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd.
Shakspeare.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks
he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows.
Shakspeare.

FEL

Opinion that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputation's banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
Shakspeare.
How oft the fight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.
Shakspeare.
The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous
knave,
Some hate notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!
Shakspeare.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet.
L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would engraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian feed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed.
Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal.
Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, coarser-like, the person will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella.
Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man.
Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed.
Bacon.

To FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition, to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing.
Shakspeare.

FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind.
Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminences whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world.
Harris's Logic, Introduction.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The gentils should be fellow-heirs.
Eph.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth.
John.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. f. One who labours in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master.

Nor lets think we of heav'n in tree on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man.
Milton.
Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dawns we serve.
Waller.

FEL

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants
to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children.
Atterbury.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An encouraging appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation,
Shakspeare.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier.
Philippus.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance.
Watts's Logic.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends.
Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve?
Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers.
Atterbury's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them.
Johnson.

FELLOW-FEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother.
L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest; commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling.
Archbishop.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.] FELLOWLY. } Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage.
Carr.

One feed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange.
Tupper.

FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; comfort; society.

This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship.
Shakspeare.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amaranthine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the fons of light Halted.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship.
Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society.
Locke.

FEL

1. Association; confederacy; combination.
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shaksp.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any fettered fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.
Most of the other christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knollys.
3. Equality.
4. Partnership; joint interest.
Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart;
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.
Milton's Paradise Regained
O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.
5. Company; state of being together.
The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a hail! Shak.
6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.
In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.
7. Fitness and fondness for festive entertainments, with good prefixed.
He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Carendon.
8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.
Corusodes having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.
9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that every man may have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker.
- FEL'LY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.
Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spens'r.
- FEL'DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that commits felony by murdering himself.
- FEL'ON. n. f. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]
1. One who has committed a capital crime.
I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakspere.
The wily fox
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons where they did the murderous deed.
Dryden.
2. A whitlow, a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.
The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wise's Surgery.
- FEL'ON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.
Ay me! what thing on earth that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stur'd up so mischievous despite! Spenser.
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.
- FEL'ONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villanous; malignant; per-fidious; destructive.
This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.

FEM

- O thievish night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the milled and lonely traveller? Milton
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dice. Dryd
- FEL'ONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.
- FEL'ONOUS. adj. [from felon] Wicked.
Not used.
I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spens'r.
- FEL'ONY. n. f. [felonie, French; felonia, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enor-

Arabick.] A small open boat with six oars. DiD.
- FEM'ALE. n. f. [sewelle, French; se- mella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.
God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Genesis
If he offer it of the herd, whether it be a male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Levit.
And, more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are maisters to their females, and their lords. Shakspere.
- FEM'ALE. adj.
1. Not male.
Fem'le of sex it seems. Milton
Swarming next appear'd
The fem'le bee, that feeds her husband drone. Milton.
 2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.
Other tuns, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.
Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.
He scupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, nor decern'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.
If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.
 3. Female Rhymes. Double rhymes so called because, in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:
Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.
Camden.
The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously,

FEN

- and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.
- FEME COVERT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.
- FEME SOLE. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.
- FEMINA'LITY. n. f. [from femina, Lat.]
Female nature.
If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of femininity take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown.
- FEMININE. adj. [femininus, Latin.]
1. Of the sex that brings young; female.

With water that is feminine,
Until the coo'ring nymph abate
His wrath, and so con corporate. Cleaveland.
 2. Soft; tender; delicate.
Her heavenly form
Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton.
 3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness.
Nimias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacy.
Raleigh's History.
- FEM'ININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.
O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once With men, as angels, without feminine? Milton.
- FEM'ORAL. adj. [femorialis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.
The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation.
Sharp's Surgery.

A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.
Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot.
I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.
Shakspere's Coriolanus.
The surface is of black fen earth. IFloodward.
He to Partina's wat'ry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear untully'd current glides. Addis.
- FEN'BERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.
- FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]
1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.
That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.
There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.
To put them out of their parents' view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.
Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand,
A fence against us and the victor's wrath. Addison's Cato.
 2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.
In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
It daring ships and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the bounccless deep. Dryden.
Shall I mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.
Employ their wives and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The act of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

4 Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,

Despight his nice fence and his active practice.

Shakespeare.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Dissever'd have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers belov'd is their grain;
Before thou can'st this kingdom to invade.

Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,
and let darkness in my paths.

Job.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bone and sinews.

Job.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls.

2 Macc.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail or other inclosure.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,

To fence my ear against thy forgeries.

Milton.

With love to friend th' impatient lover went,
Fenced from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.

Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another.

Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against.

Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throfile sing, he falls straight a capering:
He will fence with his own shadow.

Shakespeare.

A beautiful heifer in the wood is bred;
The flopping warriors aiming head to head;

Engage the r' clashing horns; with dreadful sound

The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;

They fence and push, and, pushing loudly roars,

Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore.

Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company.

Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying.

Arbutnot and Pope.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without enclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,

And love in their weak bosoms is a rage

As terrible as hate, and as destructive:

So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,

And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,

Alike from north, from south.

Rowe.

FENCER. n. s. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calimachus is great advantage; he that lets

Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,

Mark all his wand'lings, and enjoy his frets;

As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire.

Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick,

that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off.

Digby.

FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence.

Addison.

FENCINGMASTER. n. s. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.FENCINGSCHOOL. n. s. [fence and school.]

A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising.

Locke.

FEN-CRICKET. n. s. [grillotalpa.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.

To FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,

With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold.

Dryd.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off

a charge.

The dextrous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge.

Locke.

FENDER. n. s. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERATION. n. s. [feneratio, Latin.]

Ufury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The bare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and ufury from its fecundity and superfecundation.

Brown.

FENNEL. n. s. [feniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.

A sav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense

Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats

Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n.

Milton.

feoffare, low Lat.] To put in possession;

to invest with right.

FEOFFE. n. s. [feoffatus, Latin; fiefse,

French.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffees in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the escheat of his lands.

Spenser.

FE'OFFER. n. s. [feoffator, low Latin.]

One who gives possession of any thing.

See FEOFFMENT.

FEOFFMENT. n. s. [feoffamentum, Lat.]

The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, call-lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever,

by the delivery of seisin of the thing given;

when it is in writing, it is called a deed of feofment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail.

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fer-mental faculty of the stomach.

Brown.

FERMENTATION. n. s. [fermentatio,

Latin.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles:

as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together.

FER

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens.
A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before.

The sap in silent dance,
And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerable colour'd scene of things.

FERN. n. f. [peann, Saxon.] A plant.
The leaves are formed of a number of small pinules, dentated on the edges, and set close one by another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy decolled for the rickets in children.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Horrid with fern and intricate with thorn;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens.

FERNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffice'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to their forest-larc.

FEROUS. adj. [ferox, Latin; feroce, French.]

Savage; fierce.

Smedley rose in majesty of mud;
Shaking the horrors of his ampe brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze.

Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superlatation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time.

FEROICITY. n. f. [ferocitas, Latin; ferocité, French; from ferocious.] Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

Like bright Aurora, whose resplendent ray Foretells the ferveur of ensuing day,
And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
To leafy shadows, from the threaten'd heat.

These silver drops, like morning dew,
Foretell the ferveur of the day;
So from one cloud suit show'rs we view,
And blinding lightnings burst away.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason to great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of such proceedings, if in ferveur of zeal they had removed such things.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wing'd with ferveur of her love, she's flown
To her dear'd Posthumus.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present ferveur.

Dismal not feszls or poor such to sow,

On care to make Egyptian lentils thrive.

FESSE. n. f. [In heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing a third part of the escutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and lay to many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say bar-wife, or hary of six, eight, or ten; as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules, hary f eight.

TO FESTEER. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the fore which had deeply fested within me.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
And festing sore did rankle yet within.

How should our fested sores be cured?

I have some wounds upon me, and they taint,
To hear themselves remember'd.

—Well might they fester gain'd ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death.

Mind at their fouls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fester.

These was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festing in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect.

Pulsion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinus, Latin.]

Streight cast about to over-reach

Th' unwary conqueror with a fetch. Hudibras.
With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Stillingfleet.

The fox had a fetch in't.
From these instances and fetches
Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches;
Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.

- FE'TCHER. n. f. [from to fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

- FE'TID. adj. [fatidus, Latin; fetid, Fr.] Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy. Bacon.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot exultations. Arbutnot.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine, Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods, From stifled Cairo's filth and fetid fields. Thomson's Summer.

- FE'TIDNESS. n. f. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

- FE'TLOCK. n. f. [fet and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the pattern joint of many horses: horses of a low lize have scarce any such tuft. Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their aimed heels at their dead masters. Shakespeare's Henry v.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore. Dryden.

- FE'TOR. n. f. [fator, Latin.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell. The fetor may discover itself by sweat and humour. Brown.

When the symptoms are attended with a fetor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acceffent substances, and none better than whey. Arbutnot on Diet.

- FETTER. n. f. It is commonly used in the plural fetters. [from feet; petere, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet; and like manacles on the right hand. Eichs.

Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been tied, I have by other men's errors failed. Raleigh.

Passions too fierce to be in fetters bound, And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

The wretch in double fetters bound, Your potent mercy may release. Prior.

Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fetter. Addison.

I thought her pride
Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom. A. Philips.

- To FE'TTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie.

It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness. Sidney.

My conscience! thou art fetter'd
More than my thanks and wills. Shakespeare.

Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakespeare.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fetter'd, so as he cannot move? Bramhall.

A chain which man to fetter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd. Prior.

- To FE'TTLE. v. n. [A cant word from

F E V

- feel.] To do trifling business; to ply the hands without labour.

- FE'TUS. n. f. [fetus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respires in the womb. Boyle.

- FEUD. n. f. [fealt, enmity, Saxon.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would had such mental feuds In tharn g of their publick goods. Hudibras.

In former ages it was a policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain. Addison.

Scythia moorns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome. Addison's Cato.

- FEUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hale.

- FEUDAL. n. f. A dependence; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.

The duke of Parma was tempted to be true to that enterprise, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the Pope, and the protection of Spain. Bacon.

- FE'VER. n. f. [fevre, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think it thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flattery and low bending?
Shakespeare's Henry v.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakespeare.

Should not a lingering fever be remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood?
Dryden.

He had never dream'd in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of. Locke.

- To FE'VER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

Common fevrefew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England. Milton.

- FE'VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates heat's and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Cicero.

When an animal that gives such turns fev'ish, that is, its juices more alk'line, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbutnot on Aliment.

F E W

2. Tending to a fever.
A few right disorder disabled me. Swift.
3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We tofs and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.
And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the flames more sickly tose,
And farther from the feverish north retire. Dryden.
Feverishness. n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

Fe'verous. adj. [fièvreux-se, French; from fever.]
1. Troubled with a fever or ague.
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakespeare.

2. Having the nature of a fever.
All feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.
It hath been noted by the ancients, that Southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not. Bacon's Natural History.

Fe'very. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.
O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fevery.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

FE'UILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.
Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it large, or reduced to make room for feuilage of laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

FE'UILLE-MORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

FE'UTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [æo, æofo, Sax. fua, Dan.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.
We are left but few of many. Jeremiah.
So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the paction of reward? Dryden.

On winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden.
Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.
Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkeley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.
To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.
Hooker.

So having said he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?
Milton.

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden.
The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.

FE'WEL. n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the word was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fuel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils?

Others may give the fuel or the fire!
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.

A known quantity of fuel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it.
Bentley's Sermons.

To FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fuel.
Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fuels the infernal flame. Corway.

FE'WNESS. n. f. [from few.]
1. Paucity; smallness of number.
These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakespeare.
To FEY. v. a. [veghe, Dutch.] To cleanse
a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry summer no water will yield,
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tusser.

FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.]
A lie; a falsehood.
Destroy his fib or sophistry in vain,
The creature 's at his dirty work again. Pope.

I so often lie,
Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I.
Pope.

To FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.
If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Abraham.

FIBBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
FIBRE. n. f. [filre, French; fibra, Lat.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.
Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed the fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fib, in physics, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fib drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still. Dryden.

FIBRIL. n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small *fib*re or string.
The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each *fib*re of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Chyzer's Phil. Princ.

FIBROUS. adj. [fibreux, French; from *fib*re.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscidous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon's Natural History.

I saw Petrus' arms employed around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;

F I B

F I C

This way and that he wrenched the fibrous hands.
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.
The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot.

FFBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE. adj. [ficol, Saxon.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; change-ful; without steady adherence.
Remember where we are,
In France among a fickle wavering nation. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd price
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. Pope.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
He would be loth
Us to abolish; lest the adversary
Triumph, and lay fickle their state, whom God
Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FICKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Incon-stancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.
Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness, but before his marriage-day, he had taken to wit that Baccha of whom she complained. Sam.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen.

I am a soldier and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakespeare.
Instability of temper ought to be checked,
when it disposes men to wander from one term of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Hobbes's Leviathan.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell.
I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Albion.

FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.
Do not now,
Like a young wistful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of gold like mine on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly hold
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southey.

FI'CO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expelling a *fib*s for you.
Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fib to his adversaries. Caesar.

FI'CTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.
The cause of fragility is an impetuosity to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragile than metal, and to fictile earth is more fragile than crude earth. Bacon's Natural History.

FI'CTION. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fictio, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.
If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it?
Stillingfleet.

F I D

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as with its of painting there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction.

Dryden's Duressway.

The thing feigned or invented.

It through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she, she lives in afflictions.

Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah.

Raleigh.

A falsehood; a lie.

Fictitious. adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion man restrains,
And studied lines and fictitious circles draws.

Prior.

ICTYTIOUS. adj. [fictitius, Latin.]

Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly to,

That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame.

Dryden.

Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the any ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty.

Pope.

Not real; not true; allegorical; made by profopain.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory.

Addison.

ICTYTIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.]

Falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer.

Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle, I sung; but breaks off in the middle.

Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabouts the tune lay.

Allison's Guardian.

FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To play upon a fiddle.

The minstrels being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city.

Bacon's Essays.

Others import yet I oblige as from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.

Pope.

To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lew had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the nap, trying to join the two pieces together.

Arbutnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done.

Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.]

Trifles.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature.

Spenser.

F I E

1. Represented by delineation.

Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown.

2. FIGURAL Number. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.

FIG'URATE. adj. [figuratus, Latin.]

1. Of a certain and determinate form.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how fast the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.

2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.

3. FIG'URATE Counterpoint. [In musick.]
That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.

4. FIG'URATE Descant. [In musick.]
That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as con-cords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.

FIGURA'TION. n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]

Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Raen's Nat. Hist.

2. The act of giving a certain form.

If motion be in a certain order, there fol-loweth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Natural History.

FIG'URATIVE. adj. [figurativus, French;
from figura, Latin.]

1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; whereinto Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hosker.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.

How often have we been raised up for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason. Stillingfleet.

This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intension. Rogers.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical ex-ornations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions.
Dryden's Jew. Pref.

FIG'URATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.]
By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uziah and Meechias. Brown.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, biar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gillflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglafs, which have four leaves. Bacon.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases.
Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies;
for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his
Adelphi's Spiciator.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either.

Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryd.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whirlest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryd.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Hutts's Logic.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, senses, buds, poets cannot

Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Antony. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick; but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what is brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shakspere.

He set a figure to discover
If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.

12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptance, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, sparse affection,
Figures pedimental, the ele summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakspere.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to play. Stillingsfleet.

They have been taught rhetorick, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellish the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [from figuro, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing torn of them boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Baron.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance; as in picture or statuary.

As when figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
He through the sea did bear: to lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shaksp.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hosker.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakspere.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff;
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryden.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
In this the heaven figures some event. Shaksp.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

A pretender to astrology and prediction.

Quacks, figure-fingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Conscience.

FILACER. n. f. [filarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. f. [filament, French; filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it thrusts not the bodies interpolated. Bacon.

The lungs of consumptives have been contumacious, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Conjunction.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the spongy texture of the an;
And those still strike the next, 'till to the light
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blount.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filament of the hay, and as such combustible. Artifice.

FILBERT. n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beard or husks, as corrupted from full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkhoods of all colours. Bacon's Essays.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known Maggots survive when all the kernel's gone. Dryden.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Martinet.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcherh by day. Tupper.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakspere.
He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting: some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drone. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.
The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods.
L'Estrange.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrained those happy gluttons prey.
Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay.

FILCHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief;
a petty robber.

FILE. n. f. [file, French; filum, a thread,
Latin.]

1. A thread. Not used,
But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.
All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those,
and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

The apothecary-train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make.
Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.
Our pious mothers grow upon the file
To live and twenty thousand men of choice.
Shakspere's Henry iv.

The val'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle.
Shakspere's Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.
Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Upon a tawny front. Shakspere.

5. [from fil, Saxon; wijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.
The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large,
is called a rubber, and is to take off the uneven-ness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made:
and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.
Samuel.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Fils in their hand, and hammers at their side.
Dryden.

FILCUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.
Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filcutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]
To string upon a thread or wire.
Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Abbotnot and Pope.

[from feolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by fining or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Roy.

3. To smooth; to polish.
His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shaksp.

4. [from filan, Saxon.] To foul; to fully; to pollute. 'Tis sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd.
Shakspere.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Iliad.

TO FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tuttle.

Did all the greater atoms at the cell
Of chance file off to form the pondrous hall,
And undetermin'd into order fall? Blackmore.

FILMOT. n. f. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filmot, turned up with red. Swift.

FILER. n. f. [from file.] One who files;
one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius,
Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.
My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Stebury.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Accessance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He giv'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.
Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.
And thus the filial godhead answering spoke.
Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf cut then filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds and rises. Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.]
The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation antiently were eternal. Hale.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Faeton on the Classics.

TO FILL. v. a. [from fillan, Saxon.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.
Till the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim. John.

I am who fill
Infinite, nor vacuous space. Milton.

The celestial quines, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of heav'n and earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.
Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milton.

3. To satisfy; to content.
He with his contented Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep mule to hear. Milton.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Chaynes's Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.
Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see neat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.
Shakspere.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness fits to lose about
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens fill, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.
When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.
There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and to make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.
Is it far you ride?
—As far, my Lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspere's Macbeth.

TO FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.
In the cup which the hath filled, fill to her double. Revelations.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.
Shakspere.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.
Things that are sweet and fat are more filling,
and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.
Neither the Paulus Menis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas. fill up, or by degrees grow shall-lower. Woodward.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with peth, incarnation;
and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.
Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That eye that out her bakes may suck their fill. Fairy Queen.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Faust.

When ye were thisly, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esdras.

Mean while enjoy
Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton.

FIL

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting to nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spar'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham's Sophy.
You barbarity may have its fill of destruction. Pope

2. [more properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.
This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden's Aeneid, Dedication.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so 'as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer.

FILLET. n. f. [fillet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryden's Aeneid.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These mouths stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillers for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny lake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakespeare.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillers roll'd or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel.

Pillars and their fillers of silver. Harris: Exodus.

To FILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.
2. To adorn with an astragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters, and filleted them. Exodus.

To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, filip me with a three-man beetle. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Filip the stars: then let the murinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

We see, that if you filip a lute string, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLY. n. f. [filoy, Welsh; filie, French.]

FIL

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare: opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jelt to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.
I am joined in wedlock, for my fins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. f. [fylmeþa, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the catarrh, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomenon of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the fightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flip filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtrare, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.
2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Cress.

FILTER. n. f. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.
2. A strainer; a searce.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILTH. n. f. [filþ, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth's favour but themselves. Shakespeare.
Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet;
for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sindhi.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ience,
To spare the folks that give him ha' pence. Smy.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It black filthily in the camel's stomach that huts, bears, and the like, should be aimed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others' filthiness. Smyth.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filth
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd them beastly,
And 'gan abhor her blood's unkindly cure,
All were they born of her own native slum. Spenser's Faery Queer.

They never duly improved the utmost of luck,
a power, but gave themselves up to all the filth,
and licentiousness of life imaginable. Shaw.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Preface.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtrare.]

To strain; to percolate; to filter.
The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbutnot.

FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and cogulation, reduced it into crystal, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. f. [corrupted from female.]

The light summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called female hemp. Mortimer.
Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,

In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, to leave it a need,
The female to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tusser.

FIN. n. f. [fin, Saxon; vin; Dutch.]

The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare.
Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Mor.
Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watery herd, affrighted at the roar,

FIN

Rest on their fin awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way.

Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm thinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addison.
FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like Stilpides, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latipodous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with *fin*s or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he ac-knowledge'd himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [final, French; finalis,
Latin.]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milton.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon.
Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing the final. Hooker.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, Siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, in such ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuum.
Kepler.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier.

FINALLY. adj. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight becau'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies on Ireland.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own. South.

FINANCE. n. f. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased. Bacon.
The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats and forfeitures.

His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was straitened in his finances
at the siege of Byzantium. Arbutnot.

FINANCIER. n. f. [French.] One who

He was not only the first gentleman of his time, but one of the first scholars. Felton. 13. Showy; splendid. It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it. Pope. The richest part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy. Swift. 14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice. That same knave, Ford, her husband, bath the first mad devil of jealousy in him, as flies Broom, that ever governed frenzy. Shakespeare. They taught us, indeed, to clothe, to dwell in houses, To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse: A fine exchange for liberty. Philips' Briton.
- FINE. n. f. [fin, Cimbr.] 1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment. The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an erick. Davies on Ireland. 2. Penalty. Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shakespeare. 3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty. The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee simple with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakespeare. Besides fines set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addison. How vain that second life in others breath, Th' estate which wits inherit after death! Ease, health, and life for this they must resign, Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope. 4. [from finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once. In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sedgwick. His resolution, in fine, is that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker. Still the fine's the crown; Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shakespeare. Your daughter, ere she seems as won, Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter; In fine, delivers me to fill the time, Herself most chaste and abstinent. Shakespeare. The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health: but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange. In fine, he wears no limbs about him sound, With fores and sicknesses beleagu'rd round. Dryden's Journal. In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.
- To FINE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

FIN

Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakspeare.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the provocative trials of great love,
To find perceptive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In to time's love. Shakspeare.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be raised to the height: but when they come to such fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Baron's Natural History.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness; only in times of expense they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FIN

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.
O prophet of glad tidings! finisher

FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beate's waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Hobbes.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce suaguts, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot.

FLACCIDITY. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Boyle's Surgery.

To FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleoan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowly, flow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakespeare's Henry v.
It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.

Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body;
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood:
for if the words be but becoming and signifying,
and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben Jonson.

His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally lags and languishes. Addison's Spectator.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the airy vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, time is blind;
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die.

Prior.

2. [from flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with ex-

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Exodus.
Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flags there flourish where no waters flow?

Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.
Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds.

Morimer's Husbandry.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement.

Shakespeare's King John.

He hangs out as many flags as be deveryeth vessels; square, if ships; if gallies, pendants.

Sandys' Travels.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are ships of nobles; for if mens eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags of pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt

With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheron, Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniards, when your flags appear,

Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag,
is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden terpenes bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hussings in the air. Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantic with their fear,

In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair

Dryden.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags staid, but deeper on one side: than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. So th.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline.

L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some diegs remain,
Not yet perg'd of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor let a death in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, but outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitius.]

silver flagons. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Did they coin pilsots, bowls, and flagons
Int' officers of horse and dragons? Hudibras.

His trusty fluger, full of potent juice,
Was hang'd by, worn thin with age and use.

Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or stint him in his drink.

Dryden's Juvenal.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.]

Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired; and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask;
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

FLATL. n. f. [flageletum, Latin; fliegel, German.]

The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thrasher.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy sigh,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

FLA

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy sail had thrash'd the corn,
That ten-days labourers could not end. Milton.
In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.

The thief, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.
FLAKE. n. f. [floccus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element,
when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made afraid.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being tumbled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmology.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time a se-

The trumpet sounds, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, when the snow in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain. Blackmore.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more sensible than the rog'ry.

Of old auspicy and aug'ry. Hutchins.
'Tis these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conference to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lyes immortal and confirmed over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

Port to a flam was flam'd,
To avoid being flam'd. Hutchins.

God is not to be flam'd with lyes, who knows exactly what he can do, and what not.
South.

FLA

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king flam'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy.
Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme,
French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is so hot, as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton.

What flam, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did beat! Corway.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him
now. Corway.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest flame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame;
In both our English genius is express'd, Lofly and bold but negligently dress'd. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we come,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Corway.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Corway.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came!

I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakspeare.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Heil all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now break'd and glowing with the morning red;
Now at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And closing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flame-coloured stockings. Shakspeare.

stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welsh flannel. Shakspeare.

FLAP. n. f. [læppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

FLA

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound would more easily heal by turning down the flaps.

The motion of any thing broad and loose.

A disease in horses.

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the nostrils is like the white of an egg: cut some flashes with a knife, and rub it on the with salt, and it will cure.

To FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, to kick tunc-tunc in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flaps off the former, and devoured the other.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings, This painted child of dirt, that flinks and stings

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With frail it's toil
Flap filmy pins on out, to extricate
Then feet in liquid shackles bound.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And striking at her window thrice
The raven flapped his wing.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young.

The duck flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, discomfited him in the duel.

2. To fall with flaps or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long as it is to me,
This knows the powder'd soldier and with Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair.

1. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head.

2. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours, and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing.
And in the ear, not conscience, ring.

3. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to sing
His flaring beams, me, guddies, bring
To arch'd walks of two light groves.

4. To be in too much light.

FLA

I cannot stay
Flaring in sunshine all the day.

FLASH. n. f. [from flash, Mingbeu.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross the lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
In the aim and very flash of it.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smoke;
The other out of smoke brings glorious light.

And as Algon, when with heaven he strove,
Died the lucky lightning from afar,
Al his mouth his flaming breath expir'd,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gales now? your gambols?
Your forges? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the rime to a rout?

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while stupendous reflects, and hide the finger from himself, to such disquiet as awaken conscience.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times, almost like melted nitre.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wings me; every hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought.

To FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour sweep'd,
That all the blood and fish away was wash'd.

If the sea-water be flash'd with a stick or oar,
the same catches a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire.

FLASHY. n. f. [from flashy.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality.

FLASHY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLASHY. adj. [from flashy.]

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of best ge.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.

Care to acquire, and beauty's plumes
Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
As every sudden lightning quite abate.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is placed taught, and easiest learner,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.

The world is in people flat before her feet,
And worship her as goddess of the wood.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.

He, like a puling cackald, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tinned piece.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, flat, fat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His host with flat uring taught him that discreet flays make speedy journeys.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought on purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to ad-liberating facts.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
—I will, that's flat. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage;
And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost
If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fratry gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, thrusts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meek cloud of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanic louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras
12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.
The upper end of the windpipe is endowed with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray on the Creation.

FLAT. n. f.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viols, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Watson's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison on Italy.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
'Till o'er top old Pelion, or the skyish head Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fall by a mountain. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, O'erboards your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shaksp.

Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln wathes have devoured them. Shakespeare's King John.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakespeare.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.

Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dangerous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And scamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

Must we now have an ocean of mere flat and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A dated mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,

Bid me to thee, my royal change, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryden.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Diffends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Greesh.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flattened. Bacon.

To FLAT. v. n.

1. To grow flat; opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

2. To render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downward; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?
—An it had not fallen flatlong. Shaksp. Tempest.

FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]

He in these wars had flatly refused his aid. Sidney.

Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience, or support. Dan.

Unjust, thou say'st,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milton.
Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, exclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLATNESS. n. f. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.

2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the collier looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.

3. Deadness; insipidity; rapidness.

Deadness of sense in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father:
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakspare.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations! 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into sustain, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pale of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.

To FLATTEN. v. a. [flat, French; from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

2. To beat down to the ground.
If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer.

3. To make vapid.

4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.

To FLATTEN. v. n.

1. To grow even or level.

1. To soothe with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent. Shakspare.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Proverbs.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Psalms.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

Averse alike to flatter or offend. Pope.

I scorn to flatter you or any man. Newton.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
Provoke our censure. Young.

3. To please; to soothe. This sense is purely Gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flattens them. Dryden.

4. To raise false hopes.

He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring guile. Milton.

FLATTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsties.

When I tell him he hates flatterers;
He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perform.

Bacon.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.

Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants.

Addison's Guardian.

The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer.

Swift.

FLATTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness;

And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery.

Rowe.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands. Pope.
See how they beg an aim of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lye.

Young.

FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape.

Woodward on Fishes.

FLATULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turbulence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency.

Arbutnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions.

Glanville.

FLATULENT. adj. [from flatulentus, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Peas are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion.

Arbutnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again.

Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity.

Glanville.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works.

Dryden.

FLATUOSITY. n. f. [from flatuositas, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly.

Bacon.

FLATUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine.

Bacon's Natural History.

FLATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore dissipated by warm aromatics.

Quincy.

Woodward on Fossils.

TO FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle.

Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity.

Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For use is ornament and flaunting show;

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,

And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.

Dryden.

You sit, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.

Arbutnot.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.

Pope.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble, Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his piety!

Shakespeare.

FLAVOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.

Addison.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disfecte,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows.

Dryden.

FLAVOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degenerate there, and fruits decline'd

From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind.

Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [from flā, to break; flōh, Saxon, a fragment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open.

Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw.

Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound.

Dryden.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;

And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it fell,

Should gape immense, and rushing down, o'er-whelm this nether ball.

Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some still china-jar receive a flaw.

Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.

Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scribes and brokers do value unbound men to serve their own turn.

Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,

Could we be certain such they were, to known;

But since some flaws in long descents may be,

They make not truth but probability.

Dryden.

And laid her down out in law,

To nail her journey with a flaw.

Hudibras.

Their judgement has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires.

Addison.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception.

Asterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flō, Latin.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;

As humorous as winter, and as lude;

As flaws congealed in the spring of day.

Shaksp.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, 't' expel the winter's flaw.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north-flaw afraid,

Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,

Was foil'd Eurialus.

Chapman's Iliad.

Bustling their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gulf, and flaw,

Bores, and Cæcias, and Argelles loud,
And Thraecias tend the woods, and seas upturn.

Milton.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself

Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals

scar them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable.

Milton.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in; I heard the mighty flaw

When first it broke, the crowding engines saw
Which choak'd the passage.

Dryden's Aureng.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts, Impossible to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a Winter's fire.

Shakespeare.

TO FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flawed heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup.

Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flawed
The garment stiff with ice, at hearth is thaw'd.

Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flawed the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchant's goods.

Shaksp. Henry VIII.

FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more val, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous.

Boyle.

FLAWN. n. f. [from flā, Saxon; flan, French; vlaye, Dutch.] A sort of custard; a pie baked in a dish.

Di.

Lay waving round.

To FLEDGE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

F L E

To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledge enough to shift for themselves.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones, till they be fledge and come almost to full height in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of Providence.

The sandals of celestial mould,
Fledge'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,

Surround her feet.

To FLEE. v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost universally written fly, though properly to fly, to run, to flee, is to move with wings, and flee, to run away. They are now confounded.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Be hold, this city is near to flee unto.

Macdoff is fled to England.

Like simple birds into a net,
So grossly woven and ill set,

None of us fall into those circumstances of danger, want, or pain, that can have a power of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to, but him.

FLEECE. n. s. [fly, Saxon; flece, Dutch.] As much wool as is shorn from one sheep.

On a g account of the annual increase
Both of their lambs and of their wool's fleece,

So many days my ewes have been with young,
So many months are I shall shear the fleece.

I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I care.

Sailors have used every night to hang fleeces of wool on the sides of their ships, towards the water; and they have cruised fresh water out of them in the morning.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the fleeces.

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.

2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of his wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people.

FLEE'CED. adj. [from fleece.] Having fleeces of wool.

As when two rams, arm'd with ambrosial pike,
Fight for the rule of the rich flock and flock,
Their horned fronts to fling on either side
Do meet, that with the terror of the shock
Attorned both stand transfixed as a block.

FLEE'CY. adj. [from fleece.] Woolly, covered with wool.

Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich these downs is worth a thought
To that my errand.

From eastern point
Of Libya, to the fleecy fairs, that bears
Andromeda far off Atlantic fairs.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn,
Let fleecy flocks her rising hills adorn.

The good shepherd tends his fleecy care,
Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air;

Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep direct.

The wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front.
Shakspeare.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flick'ring on her nest made short essays to sing.
Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spreads,
And with her feather'd arms embrace'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love.
Dryden.

FLICKER. v. a [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are open, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the flickers.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now the flickers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them.
King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest: as in a jack.

And claims the prize because he best did run.
Dryden's Lod. King.

As eager of the chase, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd:
On law and lov'd, and, burning with desire,
Pursu'd her flight, her flight increas'd his fire.
Pope.

2. The act of using wings; volation.
For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with plumes light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latin palace took her flight. Dryden.
Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite. Dryden.

besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space past by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; folly of the soul.

Old Imdar's flights by him are reacht,
When on the gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shew'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.
Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scoldings fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of Fiance were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to decide these things.
Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight.
The self-same way. Shakespeare.

texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.
To FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling.
Skinner.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other: nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbutnot's John Bull.

2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.

It I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I love, unpunish'd let me die. Shaks.

- To FLING. v. a. p. p. t. e. r. flung; part.
flung or fling. [from fling, Lat. Skinner:
according to others from flying; so to fling is to set flying.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

The matrons fling their gloves,
Ladies and maids their luffs and handkerchiefs Upon him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and is the fling,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings.
Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.

How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung.
Denham.

3. To scatter.

Every beam new transient colours flings, Colours that change whenc'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.

A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet.

5. To move forcibly.

The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spectator.

6. To cast; in an ill sense.

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakespeare.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward.

10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase;
to defeat of a prey:

These men are too well acquainted with the chance to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.
Addison's Spectator.

- To FLING. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.

The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hulibras.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare.

and flourish of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object.
L'Estrange.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their finer speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them.
South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;
He lards with flourish his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be pleas'd and hang;
Dryden.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems
finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourish of a bible curiously printed.
Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourish about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye.
More against Atheism.

4. To flourish. n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they my, or in his flower;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r.
Chapman.

5. To flourish. v. a. [flouten, Dutch;
flouwe, Frisick.] To mock; to insult;
to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency.
Shakespeare.

The Norway in banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
Certainly he flout'd us downright.
Shakespeare.

She rail'd at her, that she should be so im-modest to write to one she knew would flout her.
Shakespeare.

Philida flouts me.
Walton's Angler.

6. To flourish. v. n. To practise mockery;
to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this post to cut off this argument?
Shakespeare.

With talents well endu'd
To be scornful and to rule;
When you perly use your flout,
Flout and gibe, and laugh and flout.
Swift.

7. To flourish. n. f. [from the verb.] A mock;
an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given?
Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and heaving flout.
Hudibras

Then do as we have'd you a butter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall find without.
Dryden.

How in my flouts and jeers must I expiate myself by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an interperate cure?
Calamy's Sermons.

8. To flourish. n. f. [from flout.] One who jeers.

To FLOW. v. n. [flow, an, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.

The god am I, whose yellow water flows
Around these haids, and fattens as it goes.
Dryden's Aeneid.

Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.
Dryden.

Endless tears flow down in streams.
Swift.

2. To run; or posed to standing waters.

Whosoever stands in standing water flows;
Of misty fumes make bridges, if it flow.
Dryden.

3. To rise; not to ebb.

This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between.
Shakespeare.

4. To melt.
Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence.
Isaiah.

5. To proceed; to issue.
I'll use that tongue I have; if wit flow from't,
I shall do good.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse.
South.

6. To glide smoothly without asperity;
as, a flowing period.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence.
Hakewell on Pericles.

7. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.
Vulgar is sweet and flowing in his hexameters.
Dryden.

Did sweeter sounds adorn thy flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounce'd, or angels sung.
Pope.

8. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men.
Chapman.

9. To be copious; to be full.
Then shall our names,
Be in their flowing cups freshly rememb'rd.

He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers.
Spenser.

11. To flow. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.
When hops is scarce, practical, what you have a stream at hand to flow the ground.
Motimer's History.

Flow. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.
Some from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flow and ebb of the seas, illustrating the motion of the water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel.
Brown's Essay on the Nature of the Sea.

The ebb of tides, and moon mysterious;
We as art's elements find understand.
Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.
The noble power of suffering, bravely bearing above that of enterprising, great, and noble minded confidence and inflexible resolution, to have an accidental flow of spirit, or a sudden tide of blood.
Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility;
tongue.

Flowing is not a flow of words, nor the distinguishing of an hour-glass; but an effect of passion, that a man know something which he knows before, or to know better.

4. FLOW'ER. n. f. [flower, Fierch; floures, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petals, a stamen, apex, and style; and which flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into ones, which are not composed of other parts,
and which usually have but one single flower;
compounded, which consist of many flowers making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower
all of one entire leaf, though sometimes divided a little way into many seeming petals or leaves; as in borage, bugloss, or poppy, in which have distinct petals, and those falling singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petals of monopetalous flowers always do; but they are further divided into uniform and dissimilar flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward petals all alike, but the dissimilar have no such regularity as in the flowers of sage and dead-nettle. A uni-petalous dissimilar flower is like a six-petaled

vided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the anilochia; 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthium and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers; and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and to turn the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monk-hood; and from thence these are frequently called galleate, cucullate, and galeiculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is entire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Comminate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linnæa, delphinium, &c. and the carneculum, or calceolus, is always imperious at the tip of point. Compound flowers are first discous, or discoidal; that is, whose florets are set to close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, when, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes indented, when there is a row of petals standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum; 2d, plamifolius, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in certain rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the linnæa. 3d, Pistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jagged at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petals, are called stamens, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the orchids, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them crystals. The term campanulatus is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel.

Good men's lives
I prize before the flowers in their cups, Dying ere they flicker. Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.
When flowers are woven in the train
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets Mourn. Milton
Beauteous flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead? Chapman
Enough the time sun with all dildulic rays
Bathes our graves, and in the crimson blue
We praise the mangled self of his powers
And always let the gem above the flower. Pope

In the History of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are stalks, leaves, and roots.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The ornamentation of persons to their places, is a thing of great importance, and is the chief of the ornaments of the world.

This discourse of Cephalus, and the excellent discourse of Aristotle in it, show him to have been a great and powerful orator.

For he is a flower of speech. Pope

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, you have a flower of a life; by the age you are in for a long. Pope

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in power, as it might be baked with the flower itself. Spenser on Ireland

I can make my audit up, that all

From me do back receive the flower of all,

And leave me but the bran. Shakspeare

The flower of grain, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Shakspeare on Hamlet

But by thy case twelve mugs of wine he filled,

Next these in wort, and firm those urns he filled; Shakspeare

Be twice ten measures of the choicest fear

Prepared, ere yet defends the evening hour. Pope's Odyssey

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hobbes

Thou hast flown

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakspeare

The French monarchy is exalted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Alfred

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakspeare

Flower de Luce. n. f. A bulbous iris.

Natural species thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd the flower de luce in your arms;

Of England's ear one half is cut away. Shakspeare

The flower de luce.

To Flower. v. n. [fleurir, French; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

About her neck, or rings of rushes made. Fanny Queen

That same dew, which for time on the links

Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls.

Good now within the pretty flower's eye,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakspeare

So to the Sylvan lodge

They came, to like Pomona's labour smile;

With flowers deck'd, and fragrant smile. Milton's Paradise Lost

Then hush'd the childish year with flower's crowd,

And hush'd perfumes the field around;

But no fast flower'd mouth receiv'd

John the flake, a field of flowers. Dryden

Flowergarden. n. f. [flower and

Was the pride of naked truth. Croshaw.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.
This is a flourish; there follow excellent parables. Bacon.
We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly furnish the ornament of this creature. Bacon.
The application is so deeply riveted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishings cannot at all loosen or brush it out. More.
Villains have not the same countenance,
when there are great interests, plausible colours,

and flourish of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estrange.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them.
South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his
crimes;
He lards with flourish his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang;
Dryden.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems
finely drawn and painted, and takes some plea-

Montaigne's Husband.

FLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.
Some from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flux and ebb of these seas, illustrating the motion of water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Bacon's Essay.

The ebb of tides, and then mysterious flow;
We as our elements shall understand. Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.
The noble power of suffering breath is above above that of enterprising greatness, as a well-minded conference and noble relation, which is an accidental flow of spirits, or a tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the ing of an insight; for an effectual power, that a man know something which he cannot define, or to know it better.

FLOWER. n. f. [flour, French; flos, flours, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petals, a stamen, apex, and stylos; and when the flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other parts, and which usually have but one single leaf, or compounded, which consist of many flowers making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower
all of one entire leaf, though sometimes divided a little way into many tearing petals or leaves; as in borage, bugloss; or polypetalous, which have distinct petals, and these subdivided singly, and not altogether, as the tearing petals
of monopetalous flowers always do; but they are further divided into uniform and disorderly flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike, but the disform have no such regularity as in the flowers of sage and dead-nettle. A monopetalous disform flower is likewise further di-

Or have they as a flow'ry verge to bind

The fluid finks of that fume wat'ry cloud,

Left it again dissolve, and there's the earth? Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fine size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLUID. n. f.

1. Any thing not solid.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

C. Galen how long by hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole count of the fluids. Abulcasis and Eschschscholm.

FLUIDITY. n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluide.]

The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much by diminishing the tenacity of fluids; it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Abulcasis.

FLUIDNESS. n. f. [from fluide.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidity, and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLUMMEY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who tail'd to air. Dryden's Æneid

4. To attack by a bird of prey.
If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravens, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon

5. It is probable that flevo was originally the preterit of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape:
flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. s. [fleo, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to god's;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's Lear.
My country neighbours begin to think of being

Which but the omnipotent none could have foil'd. Milton.

Yet these subject not: I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd.
Who meet with various objects, from the sense
Variouly representing: yet still free,
Approve the best, and follow what I approve. Milton.

Strange, that your fingers should the pencil foil,
Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.

He had been foil'd in the cure, and had left it to nature. Waller's Surgery.

If their conflicts with sin they have been so often foil'd, that they now despair of ever getting the day. Culamy's Sermons.

Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new aims my foe defied. Dryden.

But I, the consort of the thunderer,
Have wog'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd. Dryden.

2. [foille, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light wing'd toys
Of sea-bird Cupid foil, with wanton dulness,
Mr. speculative and offic'd instruments. Shakespeare.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Would I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chase. Madison.

FOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foil that never breed distrust. Shakespeare.

Whoever overthroweth his mate in such sort,
as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the foil: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is call'd a foil. Carew.

So after many a foil the tempter proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall. Milton.

When age shall level me to impotence,
And twining pleasure leave me on the foil. Southey.

Death never was a stake with greater toil,
Nor ever was fate to near a foil. Dryden.

2. [feuille, French.] Leaf gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,
And golden foil all over them display'd. Fairy Q.

Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the plucking foil Set off to the world, nor in broad rumour lies. Milton.

3. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.

As the black silk cap on him begun
To set for foil of his milk-white to serve. Sidney.

Like bright metal on a tullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare.

The fulcrum of thy weary steps
Biteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home. Shakespeare.

'Tis the property of all true diamonds to make the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mastic and burnt ivory.

He who has a foil to set him off; we oppose the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector. Proude on the Odyssey.

4. [from foille, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.

He that plays the king shall be overcome; his mastery shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target. Shakespeare.

Bentley's Sermons

3. Example.

FOOTSTOOL. n. f. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet

I have w footstool in from our seat, And made our footstool of security.

Shakespeare

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring Kings to only their God, and men their King, By these mysterious links to fix and tie Men to the footstool of the Deity.

Denham

Let echoing rhymes make his praises known On earth, his footstool, as in heaven his throne.

Roscommon

By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool.

Stillingfleet

FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops,

Out 'twixt asleep and wake.

Shakespeare

When such a positive abandon'd fop, Among his numerous abominations, Stumbles upon some tolerable line, I first to see them in such company.

Roscommon

The lord's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat.

L'Estrange

In a dull stream, which moving slow, You hardly see the current flow; When a small breeze obliquely the course, It whirls about for want of force,

And in its narrow circle gathers

Nothing but chaff, and straw, and feathers:

The current of a female mind

Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;

Thus whirling round, together draws

Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straw.

Swift

FOODOOLE. n. f. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,

And handled you like a fopdoole.

Hudibras

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the loud of shallow foppery enter

My sober house.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guineas of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in dislight of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies.

Shakespeare

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, then the sorrows of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity.

Shakespeare's K. Lear

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in.

Stillingfleet

But though we fetch from Italy and France Our fopperies of tune and mode of dance, Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense.

Granville

I wish I could say quare fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects.

Swift

FOPPISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools never had less grace in a year;

For wise men are grown foppish,

And know not how then wits to wear,

Then manners are to apish.

Shakespeare

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have; The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave; The slothful negligent, the foppish neat; The few'd are airy, and the sly discreet.

Garrick

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women.

Aristotle

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt.

Law

FOPPISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.

FOPPISHNESS. n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

FOPPING. n. f. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

My works in Colce's toilet gain a part, And, with his taylor, share the fopping's heart.

Tickel

FOR. prep. [for, Saxon; voor, Dutch.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his Son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant.

Hooker

Edward and Richard,

With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath, Are at our backs.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Speak, good Commius;

Leave nothing out for length.

Shakespeare

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels.

Raleigh's History

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment.

Bacon

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention.

Bacon's War with Spain

The governor's flying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for half left behind them.

Knapton's History

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victuals.

Knapton

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,

This cannot take her;

FOR

If of herself she will not love,

Nothing can make her.

Shubling

Care not for frowns or smiles.

Denham

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickedest for hoping.

Hammond's Practical Catech.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

Taylor

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low, that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them.

Ray on the Creation

I but revenge my fate; didaunt, betray'd, And suffer death for this ungrateful maid.

Dryden

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief, Roar'd out for anguish and indulg'd his grief.

Dryden

For his long absence church and state did groan, Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne.

Dryden

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd For what befalls at home or what abroad.

Dryden

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;

For pity, aggravate my crime no more.

Dryden

Matrons of renown, When tyrant Nero burnt the imperial town, Stuck'd for the downdial in a doleful cry, For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.

Dryden

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers.

Lactantius

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but hulk the better for any thing else.

Locke

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for temptations.

Addison

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise, And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise.

Prior

Which best or worst you could not think;

And die you must for want of drink.

Prior

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt.

Swift

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us.

Swift

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time.

Swift

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for request,

Than we to stretch it out.

Shaksp. Coriolanus

A paltry ring

That she did give me, whose poetry was,

For all the world, like cat's paw poetry

Upon a knife; love me and leave me not.

Shaksp.

For all the world,

As thou art at this hour, was Richard then.

Shaksp.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters.

Bacon's Essays

Austerity followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the political.

Bacon's Essays

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects.

Bacon's Essays

For me, if there be such a thing as I. Waller.

He saith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it.

Stillingfleet

Our laws were for their matter foreign.

Hales

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's commands.

Temple

For me no other happiness I own,

Than to have been no issue to the throne.

Dryden

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,

I to the port of death securely tend.

Dryden's Essay

After death, we spring to life just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures.

Dryden.

Such little natures, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong.

Tate's Juvenal.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually laps them.

Pope.

Lo, some are vellow, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.

Pope.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.

As for Marimadus the general, they had no just cause to mist ke him, being an old captain of great experience.

Knelles.

4. In the character of.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth?

Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:

But let her go for an ungrateful woman.

Philips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,

This field, where from my youth I've been a carrier,

I, in this field, should die for a deserter?

Gay.

5. With resemblance of.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up.

Shakespeare's Henry v.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd.

Milton.

The flutt'ring steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,

And bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight:
Edward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.

Dryden.

6. Considered as; in the place of.

Our present lot appears

For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe.

Melton.

The counsel table and par-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited.

Carleton.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.

An ant is a wise creature for itself: but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard.

Bacon.

He refused not to die for those that killed him,
and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it.

Boyle.

Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,

Not for protection, but to be devour'd.

Dryden.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those our critics much confide in;
Though meely writ at first for filling,
To raise the volume's price a shilling.

Swift.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.

It is for the general good of human society,
and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate.

Tillotson.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it.

Addison's Spectator.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.

We sailed from Peru for China and Japan.

Bacon.

As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven.

Hayward.

We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind.

Addison.

10. In comparative respect.

For bulks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove.

Dryden.

11. With appropriation to.

Shadow will urge for summer; prick him for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book.

Shakespeare.

12. After O an expression of desire.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend

The brightest heaven of invention!

Shakespeare.

13. In account of; in solution of.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

14. Inducing to as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice.

Tillotson.

15. In expectation of.

He must be back again by one and twenty,
to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with.

Locke.

16. Noting power or possibility.

For a holy person to be humble for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be governed by tutors.

Taylor.

17. Noting dependence.

The columns of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility up on the dimmets of the light they are beheld by.

Bye.

18. In prevention of; for fear of.

Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth for burning in mow.

Tusser.

And, for the time shall not seem tedious,

I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,

In this self place.

Shakespeare's Henry v.

There must be no alleys with hedges at the hither end, for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green: nor at the further end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath.

Bacon's Essays.

She wrapped him close for catching cold.

Lowell.

19. In remedy of.

Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good for the toothach.

Gairdner.

20. In exchange of.

He made considerable progress in the study of the law, before he quitted that profession for this of poetry.

Dryden.

21. In the place of; instead of.

To make him copious is to alter his character;
and to translate him line for line is impossible.

Dryden.

We take a falling meteor for a star.

Cowley.

22. In supply of; to serve in the place of.

Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective.

Dryden.

23. Through a certain duration.

Some please for once, some will for ever please.

Roscom.

Those who sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it.

Locke.

The administration of this bank is for life,
and partly in the hands of the chief citizens.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing
Successive conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels whatso'er they cost.

Prior.

The youth transported, asks without delay
To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day.

Garth's Ovid.

24. In search of; in quest of.

Philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men.

Tillotson.

25. According to.

Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony.

Boyle.

26. Noting a state of smoothness or readiness.

Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Shakespeare.

If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryd.
27. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.

How quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish, over-careful thers,
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains

with care,

Their bones with industry: for this engross'd

The cinker'd heaps of strong achieved gold,

For this they have been thoughtful to invent

Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Shakespeare's Henry v.

The kingdom of God was first sent by the self upon which counted twice are left for our struggle, two marks.

Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,

In words worth dying for, he celebrate.

Can.

For he writes not for money, nor for praise,

Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays.

Dryden.

There we shall see, a sight worthy dying for,
that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us.

Bye.

He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company.

Tillotson.

Even death's become to me no dreadful name,
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,

I saw him, and condemn'd him first for you.

For this, his needful to prevent his art,

And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart.

Dryden's Fanny.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain,
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain.

Dryden.

Let them who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine for noble ends.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

28. Of tendency to; toward.

The kettle to the top was hoist;
But with its upside down, to show

Its inclination for below.

Su.

29. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive.

Hooke's Preface.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have to often drawn it for a good one.

Dryden.

Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife.

Dryden.

He for the world was made, not us alone.

Corr's.

They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him.

Smaller's.

Aristotle is for poetical justice.

Denn's.

They are all for rank and foul feeding.

Johnson.

30. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,

That she thinks nothing else fit for me.

Denn.

A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in th's case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement.

Locke.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts even of the justice of God.

Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatic and Mediterranean.

Addison on Italy.

Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land.

Arbutnot on Persia.

Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.

Fleur.

31. With intention of.

And by that justice had remov'd the cause
Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent,
Tow off, alas, involv'd the innocent.

Waller.

Here confusion with delight may read,
How to chuse dogs for scent or speed.

Waller.

God hath made time things for as long a duration as they are capable of.

Tillotson's Sermons.

FOR

For this, from Trivia's ample and her wood,
Are courtes div'n, who shed their masters' blood.

Dryden.

Such examples should be set before them, as pattern for their daily imitation.

Locke.

The next question usually is, what is it for?

Locke.

Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector.

Broome.

32. Becoming; belonging to.

It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Shakespeare.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take.

Daniel.

It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend to many good men in the winning of it by force.

Knolles.

Jells for Dutchmen and English boys.

Cowley.

Is it for you to ravish seas and land,
Unauthorized by my supreme command!

Dryden.

His fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities.

Dryden.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give,
why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do,
and perish with them.

Tillotson.

33. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth.

Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows, the next minute supervene.

Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be for any thing yet certainly determined on either side.

South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.

Swift.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system.

Bentley.

34. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,
The other good for twigs, the poplar for the mill.

Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason.

Tillotson.

35. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,

They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood.

Dryden.

36. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for to many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Caesar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden's Persius.

First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught.

Dryden's Virgil.

37. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall

Shakespeare.

As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy.

Bacon.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;

Too noble for revenge.

Dryden's Juvenal.

38. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God?

Tillotson.

39. In regard of; in preservation of.

I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

Vol. I.

FOR

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart.

Shakespeare.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls.

Adelphi's Spectator.

40. For all; notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish? since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing
I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprise.

Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the christians, the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up.

Knolles's History.

But as Noah's pigeon, which returned no
more,

Did shew the footing found for all the flood.

Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment.

Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home.

Stillingfleet.

I though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will,
for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account.

Boyle on Colours.

She might have passed over my business;
but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her perfections.

Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition.

South.

41. For to.

In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause.

As I come,
for to see you, for I love to see you:

in the same sense with the French pour.

Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and,

for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now

On this vile body for to wreak my wrong!

Fairy Queen.

A large posterity

Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain.

Bacon.

FOR. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with touches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues

Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not.

Shakespeare.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;

For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one winter more would hold.

Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety least.

Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God;

for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God.

Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.

Spenser on Ireland.

FOR

Jealous souls will not be answered to:
They are not ever jealous for a cause.

But jealous for they're jealous.

Shakespeare.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For he is with me.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Nor (well'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd: so fire augmenteth flame.

Fairfax.

Many excellences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. For as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard; we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of.

Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of sweet water.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. For why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him.

Knolles.

To FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.
Not in use.

Forage, and run

To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come to nigh.

Shakespeare's King John.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,

Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,

Forage for prey.

Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn,
and the dam went abroad to forage for them.

L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray

When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;

But near the city walls their waiting take,

Nor forage far, but short excursions make.

Dryden.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill

Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp

Ravage in blood of French nobility.

Shakespeare

To FORAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land.

Spenser on Ireland.

The victorious Philistines were worried by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army.

South.

FORAGE. n. f. [fourage, German and French; from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a hand select from forage drives

A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,

From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,

Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains

Their boot.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Provisions sought abroad.

Some of the public magazines preface,

And some are sent new forage to provide.

Dryden.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd.

Dryden's Fables.

FOR

FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the found, will deaden it; but in the pass ge of the found they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Natural History.

TO FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn [forbæ; an, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as, for swear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Chrysos.

2. To pause; to delay.
I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong, I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakespeare.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbare to go forth. 1 Samuel.
At this he started, and forbare to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Proverbs.

TO FORBEAR. v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily.

Forbear his preference, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

The plaster alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it, as well as forbid new humour. Bar.

Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the light.
O teach me to believe thee thus so ceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accuse; to blast. Now obsolete.

To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden? Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakespeare.

FORBIDDER. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDING. participial a'j. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

By force of that force which before it won. Dante.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shakespeare.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
But I by free content. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to the upvotion. Hosier.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Lacke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. Hebrews.

Not long in force this charter stood;
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

O thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shaksp.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,
Ne'er pres'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

TO FORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Brown.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune
Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd
To have wrought such wonders with an arm's jaw,
I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deuteronomy.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine;
Just where the bone distinguished either loin:
It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To enforce; to urge.

Three blit'ring nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated, and discovered land at last;
High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore. Dryden's Æneid.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year. Milton.

5. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of party contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

FOR

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land
To Trojan guests; left, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryden.

6. To gain by violence or power.
My heart is yours; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear;
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford?
Dryden.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.
Troy wall'd to high,
Atreides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.
Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dare boldly go a new-found world to force.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

8. To ravish; to violate by force.
Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

9. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.
Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forc'd conceits. Addison.

10. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.
Here let them lie
Till famine and the age eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours?
We might have met them daresful, beard to beard.
Shakspeare.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoke, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

11. To FORCE out. To extort.
The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon.
This word I have only found in the following passage.
That moaning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armourer put on his backpiece before and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries, but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Camden's Remains.

To FORCEDLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unnaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnett's Theory.

To FORCEFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might;
impetuous.

Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Against the steel he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.
Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palemon from prison took his flight. Dryden.
He pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went.
Pope.

To FORCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.]
Violently; impetuously.

To FORCELESS. adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

To FORCEPS. n. s. [Latin.] Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to ex-

FOR

tract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quercy

To FORCE. n. s. [from force.]

1. That which forces, drives, or constrains.
2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forces. Wilkins' Dædalus.

To FORCIBLE. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty; opposed to weak.
That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton

2. Violent; impetuous.

Jersey, below'd by all: for all must feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
Like mingl'd streams more forcible when join'd:
Jersey shall at thy altars stand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words. Job.
God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation to forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder. Raleigh's History.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far
Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,
And in embraces forcible and foul Ingend'ring with me. Milton.

The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

To FORCIBLENESS. n. s. [from forcible.] Force; violence.

To FORCIBLY. adv. [from forcible.]

1. Strongly; powerfully.

The gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.

2. Impetuously; with great strength.

3. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire
Into the castle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen.
The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital Racon.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hammond.

To FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and enclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind. Brown.

When they have seized their prey, they will to tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derrham.

To FORD. n. s. [from ford, Saxon, from feran, to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Furifax.

FOR

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy peris'd lord. Dryden.

To FORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's thin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Rail's History.
Fording his current where thou had'st it now.
Perham.

To FORDABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Scenietæ upon the Euphrates,
where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raleigh.
A countryman founded a river up and down,
to try where it was most fordable; and where it water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

To FORE. adj. [from fore, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move stronger and go further in the fore lines from the first local impression.
Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

To FORE. adv.

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four fakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.

To FOREADVISE. v. n. [fore and advise.]

To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,
As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

To FOREAPPOINT. v. n. [fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.

To FOREARM. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should not forearm his mind with this perturbation, that, losing his passion, whatever is offered to his inclination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care
With rules to push his fortune, or to bear.
Dryden's Æneid.

To FOREBODE. v. n. [fore and bode.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.

An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
With these foreboding words restrains their hate.
Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be present of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you dead, while I in vain implore:
My heart forebodes I never shall see you more.
Dryden.

My soul forebodes I should find the bow'r
Of some full monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r.
Pope.

FOREBODER. n. f. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet; a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBY. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won Foreby a fountain, where I late him left. F. Queen.

To FORECAST. v. a. [fore and cast.]

1. To scheme; to plan before execution.
He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds. Daniel.

2. To adjust; to contrive antecedently.

The feast was serv'd; the time to wail forecast,
That just when the dulcet and fruits were plac'd,
The fiend's alarm began. Dryden.

3. To foresee; to provide against.

It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange.

To FORECAST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained have, how can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.
When broad awake, the fiends in troublous slit,
Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. F. Queen.

FORECAST. n. f. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan;
antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the single rein,
The king was fully finger'd from the deck! Shakespeare's Henry vi.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods. Addison on Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Memory and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECASTER. n. f. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FORECASTLE. n. f. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulkhead: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all the ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Fifth.

FORECHOSE. n. part. [fore and chosen.]
Pre-elected.

FORECITED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

Greaves is of opinion, that the alteration mentioned in that forecited passage is continued. Arbutnot on Coins.

off the power of redemption.

FOREDECK. n. f. [fore and deck.] The anterior part of the ship.

I to the foredeck went, and thence did look For deck Scylla. Chapman's Odyssey.

To FOREDESIGN. v. a. [fore and design.]
To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and foredesigned by the wise Author of nature. Cheyne.

To FOREDO. v. a. [from for and do, not fore.]

1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete. Opposed to making happy.

Befecching him, if either salves or oils,
A foredo wight from doos of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fairy Queen.

That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in dolours had foredone. F. Queen.

This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This is the night
That either makes me, or foredo me quite. Shakespeare.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.

Whild the heavy plowman toars,
All with weary talk foredone. Shakespeare.

To FOREDOOM. v. a. [fore and doom.]

To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryden's Æneid.

The willing metal will obey thy hand
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Ægæan state. Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to then appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-END. n. f. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare

In the fore end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Bacon.

FOREFATHER. n. f. [fore and father.]

Ancestor; one who in any degree of alcending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker.

If it be a generous censure in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief: mine is not so. Shak.

Shall I not be disbraught,
And madly play with my forefathers joints. Shakespeare.

Our great forefathers,
Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFEIND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and feind. If from fore, it applies antecedent provision; as forefeind; if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefeind! I would not kill thy soul. Shakespeare.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefeind,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefeind,
Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakespeare.

FOREFINGER. n. f. [fore and finger.]
The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate stone
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakespeare.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacocks.

Some wear this on the middle-finger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the fore-finger. Brown.

FOREFOOT. n. f. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anterior foot of a qua-druped; in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist; thy forefoot to me give. Shakespeare.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Maccabees.

I continue my line from thence to the heel;
then making the breast with the equanimity thereof,
bring out his near forefeet, which I finish. Peacocks.

To FOREGO. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it a cr nature, or is it mer will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then the may it mend with skill;
If will, then the at will may will forego. Spenser.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither fore- given nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard essay foregone;
And now hath vowed 'till heaven engaged be
Of that despite, never to wear none. F. Queen.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego means for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master? Shak.

Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse and live so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego
a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryden's Juvenal, Ded.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakespeare.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone and when his people were increased, he built the city of Ench. Raleigh.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle on Colours.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why

Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they run'd no storm,

Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto provoked the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Bacon's Henry vii.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bishop Hall.

Cherish how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time nor tide foreflow?
Some such have been: but ah! by tempests' spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.
P. Fletcher.

To FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing

Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shaksp.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his kender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shaksp.

FORESPU'RRER. n. f. [fore and spur.]

One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this forespurrier comes before his lord. Shaksp.

FOREST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinanc's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root. Shaksp.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champagnes, but grafting, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests.
Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head.

Roscommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure.

The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, so the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agisters, regarders, bailiffs, and beedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote which is no less incident to it than the court of pypowders to a fair. Cowell.

To FORESTA'LL. v. a. [forestallan, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech; do not forefall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st it thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forefall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would must avoid.
Milton.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hith thy date,
Yet death then would the like mischief forefall.
F. Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forefallen ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shaksp.

But for my tears,
I had forefall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shaksp.

If thou covest death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than fo
To be forefall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
I will not forefall your judgment of the rest.
Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryden.
Here the murder'd pind his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Olyf

FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FORFEITURE. n. f. [forfeiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

FORGAVE. The preterit of forgive.

FORGE. n. f. [forge, French.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought.
How London doth pour out her citizens. Shakspeare's Henry v.

In other part stood one, who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Th' æolian labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

TO FORGE. v. a. [forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of marrials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold, Chapman.

Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman.
Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword, Tate's Juvenal

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

His heart 's his mouth;
What his breast forger, that his tongue must vent. Shakspeare.

Those names that the schools forger, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of public approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
For my more having would be but as sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels u' just against the good and loyal Destroying them for wealth. Shakspeare.

FORGER. n. f. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves: so in flandering, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY. n. f. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me pat once. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts had they been false, to have shewn their falsehood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephen's Sermons.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
And weapon'd himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass, Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail. Milton's Agassiz.

TO FORGET. v. a. preter. forgot;
part. forgotten or forgot. [from for and gatan, Saxon; vergessen, Dutch.]

1. To lose sight of; to be gone from the remembrance.

Which never I did remember to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakespeare.
When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
A sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakespeare.
Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Erasmus.

No sooner was our deliverance completed, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury.
Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet will I not forget thee.

Isaiah.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God;
If we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Latou.

The mass of mean forgotten things.

Anon.

FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their inkstone years. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers.

Hebrews.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Have you not love enough to hear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful? Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shakespeare.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away

The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FORGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good things pass across me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakespeare.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

2. A careless person.

To FORGIVE. v. d. pret. forgive;
part. pass. forgiven. [from for and give.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish Then heaven forgot him not. Shakespeare.

I do beseech your grace for charity.

If ever any malice in your heart.

Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

—Sir Thomas Love, I am free forgive you.

As I would be forgiven; I forgive you.

Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives. Prior.

VOL. I.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Isaiah.

If prayers

Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and infirmity for forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

Matthew.

FORGIVENESS. n. f. [from forgiveness, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgiveness. Daniel.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee.

Prayer of Manass.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakespeare.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they need pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.

Spratt.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;

And mild forgiveness intercede

To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER. n. f. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

FORGOT. } [part. pass. of forget.]

all

Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Denn.

The lost ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

To FORHAUL. v. a. [An old word. Probably for forhaul, from for and haul.]

To harass, tear, torment.

All this long tale

Nought eases the care that doth me forhaul.

Spenser's Pastorals.

FORK. n. f. [from furca, Latin; forch,
Welsh; fourche, French.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At midsummer down with the brambles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.

Tupper.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and flaves the felon to pursue,

Ran Coll our dog. Dryden's Nud's Priest.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs.

Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Adams or Medals.

To FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn begins to fork. Mortimer.

FORKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakespeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,

A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shakespeare.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?

And yet it looks like the poor dappled fools

Should in their own confines, with forked heads,

Have their round haunches guarded. Shakespeare.

He would have spoke;

But his for his return'd, with forked tongue

To forked tongue. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath

Poples the dark retreats of death,

Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,

And praise your Maker with your forked tongue. Johnson.

FORKEDLY. adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.

FORKEDNESS. n. f. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more.

FORKHEAD. n. f. [from fork and head.] Point

It seizing, no way enter might;

But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,

Effoons it fled away, and might no where be seen. Fairy Queen.

FORKY. adj. [from fork.] Forked; fur-cated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take

The crested basilisk and speckled snake;

Perad's the green lustre of the scales survey,

And with their forked tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.

FORLOREN. [The preterit and participle of the Sax. forleornan, in Dutch verloren.]

Deserted; forsook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore

Of swift Eurytos, or on Cynthus' green,

Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Fairy Queen.

That wretched would be 'gan for to abhor,

And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore. Fairy Queen.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the deserts roar;

The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore. Fairy Queen.

FORLOREN. adj. [from forleorn, from for- leornan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them teem for that they wont to scorn;

Of fortune and of hope at once forlorn. Hubb's Tale.

Tell me, good Holinot, what gas thee greet?

What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?

Or is thy baggage broke, that sounds so sweet

On art thou of thy loved lass forlorn? Spenser.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing showed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forlorn. Kneller's History.

How can I live without thee! how forego

Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,

To live again in these wild woods forlorn. Milt.

Their way

Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear

wood;

The nodding honour of whose shady brows,

Threats the forlorn and wand'ring pailenger. Milton.

My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,

Whither shall I betake me, where subsist? Milton.

Like a declining statesman, left forlorn

To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Dryden.

The good old man, forlorn of human aid,

For vengeance to his heavenly patron pray'd. Dryden's Hind.

Philomel laments forlorn. Pope.

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, un pity'd, and forlorn. Pope.

2. Taken away. This sense shows that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I with that day would shortly rescind. Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son!
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done?
Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable: in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick fight we're invincible. Shakespeare's Ham. iv.

And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shakespeare.

2. FORLO'RN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit.
Dryden.

FORLO'RNNESS. n. f. [from forlorn.]

Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they compleated the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

2. FORL'VE. v. n. [from fore and lie.]

To lie before.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd. Fairy Queen.

FORM. n. f. [forma, Latin; forme, French.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are fast too,
—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shakespeare.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew's Colmel. Sac.

Matter, as wife logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Here tools and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to whole forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our power
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance: for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Eff.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Dawson.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Phillips.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden's Æneid.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts's Logic.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakespeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious hawk, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, full to himself makes love. Sidney.

Have you observ'd a firing hare,
Litt'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear, Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

Is different; whether they be framed large to augment, or strider to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned a their true essential form; and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

3. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To FORM. v. a. [forma, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground. Genesis.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fusion, or grav'd in metal. Milton.

He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rousseau.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryden's Virgil.

FORMAL. adj. [formal, Fr. formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare.

Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakespeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express assent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in custom: it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if position serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written laws, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society; so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice;
the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder's Elements of Speech.
Bellarmine agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but without he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal act of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillinger.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential cha-racteristick; regular; proper.

Thou should'st come like a fury cover'd with snakes, Shakspeare.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shakspeare.

FORMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French;
from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satire to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make tupefices to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, stanch, skillfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, navi- gator many a fly formally the reputation of a primitive and levelle piety. South.

FORMALITY. n. f. [formalité, French;
from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as fur comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The basest perjury, and the the same. Dryden.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all far down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the impotence of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville's Scripps.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow;
but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillinger.

TO FORMALIZE. v. a. [formaliser, Fr.
from formal. A word not now in use.]

1. To model; to modify.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and adunite his whole race, as if both he and they were for many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakspeare's Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally received, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The heathens and the christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge.

FORMA'TION. n. f. [formation, French;
from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged from volcanoes, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of mountains. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbuthnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.]

Having the power of giving form;
plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the feminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermon.

FORMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Sax. first;
whence former, and formest, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before,

rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first;
—A third is like the former. Shakspeare.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critick: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past; as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Addison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbuthnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Lat.
formidabile, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful;
tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind.
Dryden's Aeneid, Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight,
And toll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chose to be the formidable- ness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.]
In a terrible manner.

Behold! even to remotest shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless;
wanting regularity of form.

All turn is formless, other oddities,
Give what is opposite to England's love. Shakspeare.

FORMULARY. n. f. [formulaire, French;
from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FORMULE. n. f. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornicare,
Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Baron.

FORNICATION. n. f. [fornication, French;
fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage, or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bliss met what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakspeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind, would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playdest the harlot, because of thy renown, and poudest out thy fornications on every one that passed by. Ezekiel.

FORNICA'TOR. n. f. [fornicateur, Fr. from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

FORNICA'TRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.]

A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatrix be remov'd;
Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakspeare.

To FORSA'KE. v. a. pret. forsook; part. pass. forsook or forsaken. [versarfen, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in 's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools space;
Prevent his falsehood, and forsake him nest:
I know you hate him. A. Philp's Distress Mother.
Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and strike the dreadful shield, Forsake by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden's Aen.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryden's Ovid.

When ev'n the flying fials were seen no more,
Forsaken of all light the left the shore. Dryden.
Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,

Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wondering gazers eyes no more. Race.

FORSA'KER. n. f. [from forsake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou dost deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God. Apocryp.
FORSOO'TH. adv. [forsooth, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tend me, forsooth, affection! Shakspeare.
A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate, Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Abraham.

Some question the genuineness of this book; because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker on Learning.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, showed his attention by answering in the words yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakspeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guarlian.

To FORSWE'AR. v. a. pret. forswore; part. forsworn. [forþswærian, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I humbly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakspeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that fell chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most nonchalantly to have. Shakspeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold! Dryden's Juvenal.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friends, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this treacherous perjury. Shakspeare.
One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both God and laws. Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thebes;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood. Smith.

To FORSWE'AR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

—And that true vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too. Shakspeare.

FORSWE'AKER. n. f. [from forswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. f. [fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they call'd the fort d'Arz; and from thence they battled like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to them fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their isle defend. Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part. Denham's Sophy.

My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but come to view. Dryden.

FOR'TED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong,
To lock it up the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And rains of oblivion. Shakspeare.

FORTH. adv. [forð, Saxon; whence further and furthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner. Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance
'vow'd
For Bitias' death. Dryden's Aen.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakspeare's Othello.
I have no mind of fasting forth to-night. Shakspeare.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will she not forth? Shakspeare.

When winter past, and summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them. Speiser.

Ev'n that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France. Shakspeare.

5. Out into a public character; public view.

You may set forth the same with firmness. Prachon.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a prosperous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end. Out of use.

You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakspeare.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hummel.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth; I said I was taught no more. Memoir of St. yre.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here 's a prophesy that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pompeii. Shakspeare.

Some forth their cabins creep,
And trembling ask what news, and do heart
As jealous husbands, what they would not know. Pope.

FORTHCOM'ING. adj. [forþ and coming.] Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Curry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakspeare.

We'll see your thinks here forthcoming ill. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

FORTHISSUING. adj. [forþ and issuing.] Coming out; coming forward from, a covert.

Forthissuing thus, the gale lion first to wield
A weighty ax, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forþ and right.] Straight forward; without flexions. Not in use.

He ever goes so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a mind to go back with itself. Sidney.

Arrived there, they passed in fortnight;
For still to hold the gate stood open wide.

Thither fortnight he rode to rouse the prey.
Dryden.

FORTHRIGHT. n. f. A straight path.
Here 's a maze trod, & decy'd.

Through fortrights and meanders. Shakespeare.
FORTHWITH. adv. [from forth and with.]
Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
And dreams, 'gan now to take more sound estate.
Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.
Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds;
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sovereign power, throughout the host proclaim,
A solemn counsel forthwith to be held At Pandemonium. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. Scott.

FORTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail? Dennis.
Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [from fortification,
French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art showing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss.
It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwelcome nation,
yet understood the art of fortification. Broome.

2. A place built for strength.

The hands were uncoupled, and the flag thought it better to trust to the nimble nets of its litter, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then devised to their memory, when, after stronger judgment, might dispens-some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.
To strengthen the infected parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.
Government of the Tongue.

FORTIFIER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pandemonis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [from fortify, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunstons he strongly fortifies. Shaksp.
He fortified the city against besieging. Eccles.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.

To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned.
Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But unborn worth that fortune can controul,
New strong and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The new-born affum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.
Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

TO FORTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou art impow'rd
To fortify thy tower and overway
With this potentous bridge the dark abyss.
Milton.

FORTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a block-house.

Yet was the place thereof but weak and thin
Nought tear'd their force that fortilage to win.
Spenser.

In all straights and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle (as) which should keep and command the straight.
Spenser on Ireland.

FORTIN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hammer.

Thou hast talk'd
Of Palisades, fortins, porters. Shaksp.

FORTITUDE. n. f. [from fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

In king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relict of them. Shaksp.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and bespoken martyrdom Untung. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his time,
Depriving of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with wretches and the help of Hell!
Shaksp.

FORTLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen nights, people's night, Sax.]

It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights:
thus we say, this day seven-night. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant. The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late,
Thou should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnight's space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before.
Swift.

FORTRESS. n. f. [from fortresse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.
Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing still;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave.
Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their stony bulwarks.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [from fortuit, French; fortuitus, Latin.] Accidental; casual;
happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concourse of atoms. Ray.

In casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arise,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.]
Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. f. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [from fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to misfortune. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you; you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shaksp.

He sigh'd; and could not but then fate deplore,
So wretched now, to fortunate before. Dryden.

No, there is a necessity in fate.
Why must he have bold man is fortunate.
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
His constant assurance holds him firm and right:
In a narrow path that leads to bliss,
Brav'd before there is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing mis. Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.]
Happily; successfully.

Bright Luza, call'd Britannia's fate,
And happy wife, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.]

is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunate benefit. Sidney.

FORTUNE. n. f. [from fortuna, Latin;
fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that strait whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor. Shaksp.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my fate,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.
Shaksp.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.
Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among to have a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize.
Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.
His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the neat sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prologue to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spectator.

When mis delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,
To find our mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley.

8. Fortune. v. n. [from the noun.]

To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortuned, as fair it then befel
Behind his back, unwitting, where he stood
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortuned the same night that a Christian, Leaving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Knolles.

I'll tell you as we pass along
That you will wonder what hath fortuned Shaks.
Here fortun'd Curt to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

Beauty lays open love's fortunebook;
On whose fair revelations wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crahan.

11. Fortunehunter. n. f. [fortune and hunt.]

A man whose employment is to inquire after women with great portions, to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortune- hunters and fortune-dealers. Spectator.

12. To fortune-tell. v. n. [fortune and tell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futura.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune- telling. Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shaks.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Warton.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleveland.

3. Fortuneteller. n. f. [fortune and teller.]

One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futura.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shaks.

A Welchman being at a tavern-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hands, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other,
to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortune-teller
Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

4. Forty. adj. [fourty, Saxon.]

Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shakespeare.

He that upon levity quits his station in hopes to be better, his forty to one loses. L'Estrange.

5. Forum. n. f. [Latin.] Any publick place.

The forum was a publick place in Rome,
where lawyers and orators made their speeches before their proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watts on the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,
And near a forum flank'd with marble shrines,
Where the bold youth, the numerous fleets to steer,
Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

6. To forward. v. a. [for and wander.]

To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the lingering day
They travel'd had, when as they far clip'd
A weary wight, forward ring by the way. Fairy Queen.

7. Forward. adv. [forward, Saxon.]

Forwards. } Toward a part or place before; onward; progressively; straight before.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass. Fairy Queen.

From smaller things the mind of the heavens may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hack.

He that is ased to go forward, and finds the stop, falleth of his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essays.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forward in several times, carrying intelligence to Decianum. Arulphus.

8. Forward. adj. [from the adverb.]

Short summer lightly has a forward spring. Shakespeare's Richard III.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Lact.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been too forward to believe they were innate. Lect.

7. Antecedent; anterior: opposed to posterior.

Let us take the instant by the forward top,
For we are old, and on our quick'd devices
Th' maudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' the rear o' our birth. Shakespeare.

9. Forward. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Natural History.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grass and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise; to advance.

10. Forwarder. n. f. [from forward.] He who promotes anything.

11. Forwardly. adv. [from the adjective.]

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Astbury.

12. Forwardness. n. f. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Bacon.

It is so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bribe to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Bacon.

The great ones were in forwardness, the people in fury, entertaining thus any phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon.

2. Quickness; readiness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness, that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Hester.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance. Addison on Itch.

A ditch; a moat.

14. Fosseway. n. f. [fossé and way.] One of the great Roman roads through England, so called from the ditches on each side.

15. Fossil. adj. [fossilis, Latin; fossilis,
French.] That is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas. Woodward.

Fossil or rock salt, and fall gem, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward's Natural History.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable saks. Arbuthnot.

FOSSIL. n. f.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped. Bentley.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole. Hill's Math. Med.

Those bodies which will melt in the fire are called minerals, the rest fossils. Pemberton.

FOSTER. v. a. [fortenian, Saxon.]

Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdun. Perry Queen.

Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop? Shakspeare's Tempest.
Foul lights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects, and therefore, in pictures, those foul lights do not much offend. Bacon.

All things that seem to foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. Moss.

6. Disgraceful; shameful.

Too well I see and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Who first seduc'd them to that foul revolt?
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Reason half extinct
Or impotent, or else approving, sees
The foul disorder. Thomson's Spring.

7. Coarse; gross.

You will have no notion of delicacies if you table with them: they are all for rank and foul feeding, and spoil the best provisions in cooking. Felton on the Glassick.

8. Full of gross humours, or bad matter; wanting purgation or mundification.

You perceive the body of our kingdom,
How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger near the heart of it. Shakspeare's Henry 14.

9. Not bright; not serene.

Who's there besides foul weather?
One minded like the weather, most unquietly. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Be fair or foul, or rain or shine,
The joys I have profess'd in spite of fate are mine. Dryden.

10. With rough force; with unseasonable violence.

So in this throng bright Sacharissa gar'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.

In his fallies their men might fall foul of each other. Clarendon.

The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall foul upon his laws. Souch.

FOULLY. adv. [from foul.]

1. Filthily; nastily; odiously; hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.

We in the world's wide mouth

Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of. Shaksp.

The letter to the protector was gilded over with many smooth words; but the other two did fully and foully set forth his obitancy, avarice, and ambition. Hayward.

O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;

I fo'ly wrong'd him; do, forgive me, do. Gay.

2. Not lawfully; not fairly.

Thou play'd'st not foully with me. Shaksp.

FOULMOUTHED. adj. [from foul and mouth.]

Scurrilous; habituated to the use of opprobrious terms and epithets.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is, and said he would cudgel you. Shaksp.

It was allowed by every body, that so foulmouth'd a witness never appeared in any cause.

My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foulmouth'd scoundrel as he. A. Burton.

Now finding that, and scolding oft between,

Scolds answer foulmouth'd scolds; bad neighbourhood I ween. Pope.

FOULNESS. n. f. [from foul.]

1. The quality of being foul; filthiness; nastiness.

The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foulness of other cloaths are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Hutton.

2. Pollution; impurity.

It is no vice not to be a murderer, or foulness,

No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,

That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.

There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.

3. Hatefulness; atrociousness.

Consul, you are too mild:

The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy. Ben Jonson.

It is the wickedness of a whole life, encircling

all its filth and foulness into this one quality,

as into a great sink or common shore. South.

4. Ugliness; deformity.

He by an affection sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foulness.

He's fallen in love with your foulness, and he'll fall in love with my anger. Shaksp.

The fury laid aside

Her looks and limbs, and with new methods tried

Th' foulness of th' infernal form to hide. Dryden.

5. Dishonesty; want of candour.

Pity is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity and all falseness or foulness of intentions; especially to that perfidious devotion, under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised.

FOUND. The pret. and part. pass. of find.

I am sought of them that asked not for me:

I am found of them that sought me not. Isaiah.

Authors now find, as once Achilles found,

The whole is mortal if a part be unfound. Young.

TO FOUND. v. a. [from fundare, Latin; fonder, French.]

1. To lay the basis of any building.

It felt not; for it was found upon a rock.

He hath found it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Psalms.

2. To build; to raise.

These tunes of reason are Amphion's lyre,

Wherewith he did the Theban city found. Davies.

They Gabian walls and strong Pidera real,
Nomentum, Bola with Pomeria found,
And raise Colation towers on rocky ground.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. To establish; to erect.

This also shall they gain by their delay

In the wide wilderness; there they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chafe,

Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws or-dain'd. Milton.

He founding a library, gathered together the acts of the kings and prophets. Mac.

4. To give birth or original to; as, he founded an art; he founded a family.

5. To raise upon, as on a principle or ground.

Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen, that dominion is founded in grace; were it admitted as the most certain truth,

it could never warrant any such sanguinary method. Denay of Picty.

A right to the use of the creatures is founded originally in the right a man has to himself. Locke.

Power, founded on contract, can descend only to him who has right by that contract. Locke.

The reputation of the liad they found upon the ignorance of his times. Pope.

6. To fix firm.

Flunce is escaped,

—Then comes my fit again; I had else been perfect.

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock. Shaksp.

TO FOUND. v. a. [from fundere, Latin; fonder, French.]

To form by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.

A second multitude

With wondrous art founded the in sly ore,

Severing each kind, scum'd the human drofs.

Milton.

FOUNDATION. n. f. [from fondation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The baseness of houses, the goodliness of trees,

when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which nourisheth the other, nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed.

That is the way to make the city fluy;

To bring the roof to the foundation,

To bury all. Shaksp.

O Jove I think,

Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,

Where they should be relieved. Shaksp.

I draw a line along the shore;

I lay the deep foundations of a wall,

And Enos, nam'd from me the city call. Dryden.

2. The act of fixing the basis.

Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,

Since their foundation, came a nobler guest.

Locke.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Tillotson.

That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.

4. Original; rise.

Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker.

5. A revenue settled and established for any purpose, particularly charity.

He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation. Swift.

6. Establishment; settlement.

FOUNDER. n. f. [from found.]

1. A builder; one who raises an edifice;

one who presides at the erection of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;

But rivers, old as seas to which they go,

Are nature's bounty! 'tis of more renown

To make a river than to build a town. Haller.

Nor was Piceneite's founder wanting there,

Whom fame reports the son of Mulcher. Dryden.

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes

Their founder's charity in the dust laid low. Dryden.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.

3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.

And the rude notions of pedantic schools

Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,

The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,

Struck to the centre with his flaming dart

Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art, Phidias.

King James I. the founder of the Stuart race,

had he not confined all his views to the present his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison's Freeholder.

Nor can the skilful herald trace

The founder of the ancient race. Swift.

4. [fondeur, French.] A cafter; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.

Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pew-ters to their pewter, to make it found more clear, like silver. Gaillard's Almanac.

TO FOUNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.]

To cause such a forensel and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,

Or night kept charr'd below. Shaksp.

I have founder'd nine score and odd pulley;

and here, traveltainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate salubrity, taken in full

Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight

but what of that? he saw me and yielded.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as light

As any other Pegassus can fly;

So the object in view nimble in the mud,

Than all the swift hind'd racers of the flood.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:

A bear will not attempt to fly;

A founder'd horse will out-debat,

Before he tries a five-hand gate. Swift.

If you had a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your matter to tell him, but use him vicious, and founder'd into the bargain. Swift.

Men of discretion, whom people in power meet with little ceremony, and in heavy state they please drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of founder'd or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them rather resty nor vicious. Swift.

TO FOUNDER. v. n. [from fonder, French,

the bottom.]

1. To sink to the bottom.

New ships, built at the rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm. Railight's Essay.

2. To fail; to miscarry.

In this point

All his tricks founder; and he helps his physick

After his patient's death. Shaksp.

FOUNDERY. n. f. [fondrie, Fr. from fonder.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a casting house.

FOUNDLING. n. f. [from found of find.]

A child exposed to charity; a child found without any parent or owner.
We, like bastards, are laid abroad, eyes as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow.

Sidney.
I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance.

Dryden's Journal.
A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents.

Addison.
The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his sufferings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art.

FOUNDRESS. n. f. [from funder.]

1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, or begins any thing.

2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.

For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Clarissa was their chief's foundress.

Fairy Queen.
For zeal like hers, her servants were to show;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too.

FOUNT. } n. f. [fons, Latin; fontaine, French.]

1. A well; a spring.

He set before him spread
A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits, fetch'd from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink.

Milt.
2. A small basin of springing water.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.
Can a man drink better from the fountain finely paved with marble, than when it fivells over the green turf?

Taylor.
Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise.

Addison.
3. A jet; a spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkles or spouts water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or slime, or mud.

Bacon.
4. The head or first spring of a river.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends.

Dryden.
5. Original; first principle; first cause.

Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness.

Common Prayer.
You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains.

Peacocks.
This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England.

Spratt's Sermons.
FOUNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.]

Having no fountain; wanting a spring.

So large
The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert fountainless and dry.

Milton.
FOUNTFUL. adj. [fount and full.] Full of springs.

But whed the fountful Ida's top they steald with utmost haste,

All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks.

Chapman.
FOUR. v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity.

Out of use.
We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as smoothly and accurately as any of the nor-three nations, who four their wants out of the abroad with fat and full spirits.

FOUR. n. f. [properly, Saxon.] Twice two.

Just as I with'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth.

Pope's Odyssey.
FOURBE. n. f. [French.] A cheat; a tricking fellow. Not in use.

Love's envoy, through the air,
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!

Thou art a false impostor, and a fourbe.

Debam.
FOURFOLD. adj. [four and fold.] Four times told.

He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he had no pity.

Samuel.
FOURFOOTED. adj. [four and foot] Quadruped; having four feet.

Augur Attylos, whose art is vain
From flight diffund'd the four-footed train
Now beat the hoof with Nessus on the plain.

Dryden.
FOURSCORE. adj. [four and score]

1. Four times twenty; eighty.

When they were out of reach they turned and cross'd the ocean to Spain, having lost fourscore of their ships, and the greater part of their men.

Bacon's War with Spain.
The Chiots were first a free people, being a commonwealth, maintaining a navy of fourscore ships.

Sandys.
The Liturgy had, by the practice of near fourscore years, obtained great veneration from all sober protestants.

Clarendon.
2. It is used elliptically for fourscore years in numbering the age of man.

At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week.

Shakspeare.
Some few might be of use in counsel upon great occasions 'till after threecore and ten; and the two late minutes in Spain were so 'till fourscore.

Temple.
FOUR SQUARE. adj. [four and square]

Quadrangular; having four sides and angles equal.

The temple of Bel was invironed with a wall carried foursquare, of great height and beauty;
and on each square certain brazen gates curiously engraven.

Raleigh's History.
FOURTEEN. adj. [properly, Saxon.]

Four and ten; twice seven.

I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale.

Shakspeare.
FOURTEENTH. adj. [from fourteen.]

The ordinal of fourteen; the fourth after the tenth.

I have not found any that see the ninth day, few before the twelfth, and the eyes of some not open before the fourteenth day.

Brown.
FOURTH. adj. [from four] The ordinal of four; the first after the third.

A third is like the former: filthy bags!

Why do you shew me this? A fourth? I start eye!

What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?

Shakspeare.
FOURTHLY. adv. [from fourth] In the fourth place.

Fourthly, plants have their seed and seminal parts uppermost, and living creatures have them lowermost.

Bacon's Natural History.
FOURWHEELED. adj. [four and wheel.]

Running upon four wheels.

Scarcely twenty fourwheeled cars, compact and strong,

The massy load could bear, and roll along.

Pope's Odyssey.
FOUTRA. n. f. [from foutre, French.]

A fig; a scold; a word of contempt.
Not used.

A fovea for the world, and warbling base.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.
FOWL. n. f. [fugel, fuhl, Saxon; vogel, Dutch.]

A winged animal; a bird.

It is colloquially used of edible birds; but in books, of all the feathered tribes.

Fowl is used collectively: as, we dined upon fish and fowl.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their male subjects, and at their controuls.

Shakspeare.
Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the summer; but methinks very cold for winter.

Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the winter season? Bacon's Apophthegms.

This mighty breath
Instructs the fowls of heaven.

Thomson's Spring.
TO FOWL. v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.

FOWLER. n. f. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.

The fowler, warri'd
By those good omens, with swift early steps Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades.

Offensive to the birds.

Philips.
With slaughtering guns th' unwear'd fowler
- roves,

When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves.

Pope.
FOWLINGPIECE. n. f. [fowl and piece.]

A gun for birds.

'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingpiece.

Martinet.
FOX. n. f. [fox, Saxon; vos, wofsch, Dutch.]

1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears, and a bushy tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes and prey-ing upon fowls or small animals.

The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb.

Shakspeare.
He that trusts to you
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese.

Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.
These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.

Locke.
2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.

FOXCASE. n. f. [fox and case.] A fox's skin.

One had better be laughed at for taking a fox-case for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case.

L'Estrange.
FOXCHASE. n. f. [fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.

See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a foxchase, wise at a debate.

Pope.
FOXVIL. n. f. [fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.

FOXFISH. n. f. [vulpes piscis.] A fish.

FOXGLOVE. n. f. [digitalis.] A plant.

Answer a question, at what hour of the night to let a fourtrap? Tatler.
[For n. f. [for, French.] Faith; allegiance. An obsolete word.

He Easterland subdued, and Denmark won,
And of them both did foy and tribute raise.

TO FRACT. v. a. [from fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.
His days and times are past,
And thy reliance on his fractled dates
Has sunk my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.

FRACTION. n. f. [from fractio, Fr. fractio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.
The surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. A broken part of an integral.
The fracti of her faith, arts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greatly reliques
Of her o'er eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fracti and broken parts. Brown.
Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on Coins.

FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number; comprising a broken number.
We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker's Arithmetick.

FRACTURE. n. f. [from fractura, Latin.]
1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.
That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.
But thou wilt fit and grief destroy,
That so the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-set song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Herbert.

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp.

TO FRACTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.
The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wise man's Surgery.

FRAGILE. adj. [from fragile, Fr. fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.
To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare's Timon.

The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon.
When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Danban.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanville.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.
Which preservation, vain of earthly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,

Long in preparing, soon in ruin brought,
Before mine eyes thou dost set. Addison.

FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragilis.]
1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.
To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.
Fear the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Knolly's History.

3. Frailty; lability to fault.
All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Wotton.

FRAGMENT. n. f. [from fragmentum, Lat.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.
He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davidis, has shown us this way to improvement. Watts on the Mind.

If a thin or plated body, which being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be fit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Optics.

Some on painted wood
Transix'd the fragments, some prepar'd the fowl. Pope's Odyssey.

FRAGMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. Not elegant, nor in use.
She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'st it, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Denne.

FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash. Not used.
Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before
The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandys.

FRAGRANCE. n. f. [from fragrantia, Lat.]
FRAGRANCY. n. f. Sweetness of smell; pleasing scent; grateful odour.
Eve separate her spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood Half spy'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatick fragrances around. Pope.

FRAGRANT. adj. [from fragrans, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.
Fragrant the fertile earth
After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild. Milton.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRAGRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.
As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mort.

FRAIL. n. f.
1. A basket made of rushes.
2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,
As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.

When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.
The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss; man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

FRAILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.
There is nothing among all the frailness and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.]
1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.
Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakespeare.

Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Mil.

God knows our frailties, juries our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sin of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.
Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dry.

Kind wits will thine light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain,
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

That christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Lave.

FRAISCHUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.
Hither in summer-evenings you repair,
To taste the fraischur of the purer air. Dryden.

FRAISE. n. f. [French, the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.

TO FRAME. v. a.
1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.
The double gates he findeth locked fast;
The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.

2. To fit one to another.
They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do necessities to their convenient use, than to fight.
Hew timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together. M. Rimer.

3. To make; to compose.
Then chiding out few words most horrible,
Therewith did verses frame. Spenser.

Fight valiantly to-day;
And yet I do thee warn to mind thee of it;
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakespeare.

4. To regulate; to adjust.
Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to the extensive knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Lilloston.

5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forthwith hereafter theirs. Shakspeare.
I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will.
Shakspeare's Henry vi.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense or from its own operations about them. Locke.
Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms.
Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies,
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope.
How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years. Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Claren.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakspeare's Coriol.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense;
as, to frame a story or lie.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles. Bacon.

FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fabrick; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen.
Hocker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milton.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god; and all along
Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong.
Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it, all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson.

2. Any thing made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame.
Dryden's Juvenal.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frames,
And never going aright. Shakspeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church.
Clarendon.

5. Contrivance; projection.

John the butler,
Whole spirits to in frame of villanies. Shakspeare.

6. Mechanical construction.

7. Shape; form; proportion.

A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.

FRA'MER. n. f. [from frame; framman, Saxon.] Maker; former; contriver;
schemer.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if actions were predetermined. Hammond.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals.
Arbutnot on Coins.

FRA'MPOLD. adj. [This word is written by Dr. Hacket, frampul. I know not its original.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him! she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakspeare.

The frampul man could not be pacified.
Hacket's Life of Williams.

FRANCHISE. n. f. [from franchise, French.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty.

They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them.
Davies on Ireland.

His precious estate the same franchise yields,
To all the wild increase of woods and fields.
Dryden.

3. District; extent of jurisdiction.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser.

To FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.

I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

FRANGIBLE. adj. [from frango, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seems the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.

FRANION. n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A paramour; a boon companion.

I list by her side did sit the bold Samson,
Fit mate for such a mining minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy,
Might not be found a franker franion. Fairy Q.

FRANK. adj. [from franc, French.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

The modest sorts of trees yield little more for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs. Boyle.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spencer.

'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing.
L'Estrange.

2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.

Without conditions; without payment.

Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,
And he will care for all the rest to flout. Hab. Tu.

4. Not restrained; licentious. Not in use.

Might not be found a franker than I. Spenser.

FRANK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A place to feed hogs in; a sty; so called from liberality of food.

Where says he? Dost the old boar feed in the old frank? Shakspeare's Henry iv.

2. A letter which pays no postage.

You'll have immediately, by several franks,
my epistle to lord Cobham. Pope to Swift.

3. A French coin.

To FRANK. v. a. [from the noun.]

For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.

FRANKALMOIGNE. n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank aumone, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FRANKINCENSE. n. f. [from frank and incense;
so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable.
The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it.
Lill.

Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Exodus.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brewster on Languages.

Black ebony only will in India grow,
And odorous frankincense on the Sabran bough.
Dryden's Virgil.

Cedar and frankincense, an odorous pile, Hlad on the hearth, and wide perfume'd the isle. Pope.

FRANKLIN. n. f. [from frank.] A steward;
a bailiff of land. It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly English'd a gentleman servant. Not in use.

A spacious court they see,
Pith plain and pleasant to be walk'd in,
Where them does meet a franklin fair and free.
Fairy Queen.

FRANKLY. adv. [from frank.]

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.

Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.
Shakspeare's Henry viii.

When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Luke.

By the roughness of the earth, the sap cannot get up to feed it so frankly as it should do. Bacon.

I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. Spenser.

2. Without constraint.

The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses; and they, with the volunteers, who frankly lifted themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarendon.

which were contriv'd at court. Clarendon.

FRANKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; inge-nuousness.

When the conde duke had some reinforcement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared with a very unnecessary frankness; that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship; his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison's Guardian.

2. Liberality; bounteousness.
3. Freedom from reserve.

He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [franciplegium, Latin; of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidei jussor.] A pledge or surety for freedom.

The ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other; this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowell.

FRANTICK. adj. [corrupted from phreneticus, phreneticus, Latin; φρενιτικός.]

Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whole dusk set off the whiteness of the skin.

Any small spot or discoloration.

The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see;
Those be rubies fairy favours;

In those freckles live their favours.

The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot our tulips; therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles.

ECKLED. adj. [from freckle.] Spotted;
maculated; discoloured with small spots.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness.

Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Potted over like a leopard,
And thy freckled neck display'd,

My breeds in ev'ry maid.

ECKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of reckles.

ED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries redshole, i. e. the seats of peace. So

Frederic is powerful or wealthy in peace;
Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace.

EE. adj. [fneah, Saxon; ory, Dutch.]
At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved;
not a prisoner; not dependant.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any condition of subjection.

Free, what, and better'd with so many chains?

How can we think any one free than to have the power to do what he will?

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but the can no more:
Free, to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.

Set an unhappy prisoner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a public constitution for the ordering of the church.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not indifferent.

3. Not bound by fate: not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere

Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would?

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you?

Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free.
Ill the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham't thou to shew thy dangerous brow by night,

When evils are most free?
Physicians are too free, upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends.

The critics have been very free in their censure.

I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those free beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castulo, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend?

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,

Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious: with of.

Gloster too, a foe to citizens,
O'erchanging your free parties with large fines,
That sucks a overthrow religion.

No statute in his favour lays,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as other spare.

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty:

Mr Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity;
not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind.

11. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mind the guilty, and appall the free.
Confound the ignorant.

12. Exempt: with of anciently; more properly from.

These
Are such allow'd inhumanities, that honesty
Is never free of.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame.

Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, grace the flow'ry ground.

The will free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect.

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea?

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.

TO FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
It any be the trespass of the queen.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down.

Can't thou no other master understand,
I than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand?

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge to base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him than to dissolve them.

Hercules
Freed Erymanthus from the foaming boar.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way.

Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way.

*Free*s every lock, and leads us to his person.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives

Never any Sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep.

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin.

FREERO'ETER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freeroeters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any high fugates, or such freeroeters as failed under their commission, taken all the vengeance. Clarendon.

FREERO'TING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handily in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freerothing, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FRE'BORN. adj. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freborn brethren of the world!

I shall speak my thoughts like a freborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman doubt. Dryden.

Shall freborn men in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from content and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FRE'CHAPPEL. n. f. [free and chapel.] Such chapels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowell.

FRE'ECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

FRE'EDMAN. n. f. [free and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be prefer'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden.

FRE'EDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at,
As most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe,
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities

By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Maccabees.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always choosing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FRE'FOOTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too frefooted. Shakspeare.

FRE'HEART D. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must frehearted be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FRE'HO'LD. n. f. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holds in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foleland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowell.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it was made by matter of record. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own; a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Atty.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FRE'HO'LD. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the trith lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FRE'LY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would frelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow father the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verifying, we so even to eat acorns with living wheat, we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Alcibiades.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:

Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise;
But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Regis.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use; nature freely and indifferently opens the bosoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FRE'MAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakspeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
Whom nature did like captives treat before. D.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Atty.

FRE'MIND'D. adj. [free and mind.]

Unperplexed; without load of care

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed in hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FRE'NESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, died in their corporations exceed the clergy in their sons, in freeness of giving. South.

FREESCHOOL. n. f. [free and school.]

A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of the land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeshool at least erected in every diocese. Bacon.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a freeshool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN. adj. [free and spoken.]

Accustomed to speak without reserve

Nerva one night supped privately with Gaius Gracchus; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like course as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the republic and tyranny of the former times, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, as if we had them now? One of the that was at supper, and was a freeshpoken man, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FRE'STONE. n. f. [free and stone.]

Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction.

I saw her hand; she has a leath'ry hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakspeare.

The freethinkers are generally puffed with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison.

FREETHINKER. n. f. [free and think] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atchelt is an old-fashioned word; I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against christianity? and therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREIWILL. n. f. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezra.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.]

A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Maccabees.

FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [visio, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees

And mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.

Thou art all ice, thy kindest freezes. Shakspeare.

Heav'n freezes above severe, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

TO FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,

Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,
Even in his garments! Shakspeare. Richard III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakspeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakspeare.

Death came on again,

And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

TO FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted.

[freter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes

Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Freight with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, Prol.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;
With one frail, unproving plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave,
Dryden's Juvenal.

Freight with iron, from my native land,
I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To load as the burden; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship to have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her. Shakspeare.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. f. [freteur, French.]
He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from me his madding mind is flung,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;
And now fair Roland hath bred his mart,
So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser.

FRENCH CHALK. n. f. An indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as scapites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

TO FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.]
To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They maddened nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Garden's Remains.

Has he familiarly drunk'd
Your yellow starch, or laid your doublet
Was not exactly Frenchified? Shakspeare.

FRENETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; φρεντικός; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impetent,
By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

FRENZY. n. f. [φρενις; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetick, phrenetick, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

Thou knowest, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy, or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bentley.

FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequent, French; frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequency of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shakspeare.

He, in full frequency bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton.

FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally entitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterbury.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou canst not ere while into this senate: who
Of such a frequency, to many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben Jonson's Catiline.

FREQUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring

The frequent these times are, the better. Duty of Man.

An ancient and imperial city falls;
The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden.

Frequent heres shall besiege your gates. Pope.

2. Used often to practise any thing.

The christians of the first times were generally frequent in the practice of it. Duty of Man.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

Frequent and full. Milton.

TO FREQUENT. v. a. [frequent, Latin; frequenter, French.] To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.

They in latter day,
Finding in it fit ports for fisher's trade,
Gave more the same frequent, and further to invade. Spenser.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto; our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them. Hooker.

This fellow here, this thy creature,
By night frequents my house. Shakspeare. Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears
Watching the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before digested, vent. Deacon.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.]
Converfable; accessible. Not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentativus, Fr. frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.]

A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH. adj. [frere, Saxon; fraische, French.]

1. Cool; not vapid with heat.

FRE

I'll cull the fairest need for thy repair;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the fresh spring.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Description of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrow'd bays his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryd.

4. New; not impaired by time.

'This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain,
fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right, Shall lead their lives. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

'That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay. Dryden.

We will revive those times and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh like flowers in water. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milton.

6. Recent; newly come.

'Think not, 'cause men flatter say,
You're fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carver.

Whatsoever such principle there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth.
Hooker.

41. FROM under.

He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His very virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame.
Milton.

42. FROM within.

From within
The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms.
Dryden.

FROMWARD. prep. [from and peard, Saxon.] Away from: the contrary to the word towards. Not now in use.

As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went forward fromward his death.
Sidney.
The horizontal needle is continually varying towards east and west; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromwards the zenith.

Cheyne.

The other's tail, pursu'd as they pursue.
Cicero's Manilius.

The patriot virtues that defend thy thought,
Spread on thy front and in thy bosom glow.
Thomson.

2. The face, in a sense of censure or dislike; as, a hardened front; a fierce front.
This is the usual sense.

3. The face as opposed to an enemy.

His forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce.
Daniel.

4. The part or place opposed to the face.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot, that thundered upon them from the rampier in front, and from the gallies that lay at sea in flank.
Bacon.

5. The van of an army.

'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left,
A dreadful interval! and front to front
Presented, stood in terrible array.
Milton.

6. The forepart of any thing, as of a building.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front.
Bacon.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the south, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof.
Brown.

The prince approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch, and on the front above
He fix'd the fatal bough.
Dryden's Æneid.

One sees the front of a palace covered with painted pillars of different orders.
Addison.

To FRONT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oppose directly, or face to face;
to encounter.

You four shall front them in the narrow lane;
we will walk lower: if they leap from your encounter, then they light on us.
Shakspeare.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy groans.
Shakspeare.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation.
Bacon's Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghost,
With all my wrongs about me.
Dryden.

2. To stand opposed, or over against any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when the statue is erected, and a town house built at one end to front the church that stands at the other.
Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front, but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me.
Shakspeare.

French.] Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed among the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks.

Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastick: frontales may also be applied.
Wifeman.

The torpedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium,
and served as frontals in phrenesies.
Brown.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.]

In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used, in opposition to cusped, which is when the leaves of a flower end in a point.
Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the front-box grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face.
Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from frons.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form.
Milton.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontiere, Fr.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border: properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

quod in fronte conspicitur; frontispice, French.] That part of any building or other body that directly meets the eye.

With frontispice of diamond and gold
Embellish'd, deck with sparkling orient gems
The portal thence.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Who is it has inform'd us that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispice?
Locke.

The frontispice of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white.
Addison on Italy.

FRONTLESS. adj. [from front.] Not blushing; wanting shame; void of disfidence.

Thou, frontless man, we follow'd from afar,
Thy instruments of death and tools of war.
Dryden.

For vice, though frontless, and of harden'd face,
Is shamed at the sight of awful grace.
Dryden.

Strike a blush through frontless flattery.
Pope.

FRONTLET. n. f. [from frons, Latin;
fronteau, French.] A bandage worn upon the forehead.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet
on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.
Deuteronomy.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the sight.
Wifeman.

FRONTROOM. n. f. [front and room.]
An apartment in the forepart of a house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the back-rooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow.
Menon.

FRORE. adj. [bevrozen, Dutch, frozen.] Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air
Burns frost, and cold performs th' effect of fire.
Milton.

FROZEN adj. [befrozen, frozen, Dutch.]

Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

O, my heart-blood is well nigh frozen I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

FROST n. s. [froſt, Saxon]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more warlike parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost.

FROSTBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.]

Nipped or withered by the frost
The leaves are too much frostbitten. Motimer.

FROSTED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flows grow stiff with frosted gold.
Gay.

FROSTILY. adv. [from frosty.]

1. With frost; with excessive cold.

2. Without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily.

FROSTINESS. n. s. [from frosty.] Cold;
freezing cold.

FROSTNAIL. n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are strait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cosmol.

FROSTWORK. n. s. [frost and work.]
Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew con-gealed upon shrubs.

By nature Chap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze.
Blackmore.

FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shakespeare.

The air, if very cold, irritates the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire
scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.
A gnat half-starved with cold and hunger,
went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive.
L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shaks.

3. Hoary; gray-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,

Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shaks.

FROTH. n. s. [froe, Dan. and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy feed. Fairy Queen.

When wind expieth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to thivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters.
Glanville.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd, Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.
Newton.

A painter having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth.

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden.
Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; waiting.
Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.
What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by fal-coners for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill.

TO FROUNCE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To wrinkle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in country ruffs,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.
Some warlike sign must be used; either a flow-erly huskin, or an overflaring frounce. Ed. ad.

Thus, night oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil suited morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FROUZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; muffy.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-coloured red Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FROWARD. adj. [frow, earb.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse; the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteem'd the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove
She is not hot, but temperate as the moon, Shaks.
Whole ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Franklin.

I move so round, that a froward reteation of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon's Essays.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty.
L'Estrange.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FROWARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Pecvishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly
in the way of his heart. Isaiah.

FROWARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.]
Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does it smother?
How many indignities does he pay by?
how many affronts does he put up at our hands?
South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age.
Addison's Cato.

FROWER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandly hath.
Tupper.

TO FROWN. v. n. [frowner, old French, to wrinkle. Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that the frowns; I'll say, the looks are clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shaks.

They chuse their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall.
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frown
on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.
— Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shaks.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.
The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Ward high, and frown'd upon the stream below.
Pope.

FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patience endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour.
Kneller's History of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command.
Prior.

RO'WNINGLY, adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

RO'WY adj. Muffy; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy
But if they with thy gotes should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frouzy fede,
Or with the weeds be gluttid.
Spenser.

FRO'ZEN, part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.
What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms Shook Asia's crown with European arms?
E'en such have heard, if any such there be,
Whole earth is bounded by the frozen sea.
Dryden.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
T' invade the frozen wagon of the north. Dryd.
A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.
Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto. Sidney.

Be not ever frozen coy;
One beam of love will soon destroy
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carcw.

Void of heat of appetite.
Even here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.
Who virtu profess Shine in the dignity of F. R. S. Pope.
FRUIT'EROUS, adj. [from fruit, Latin.]
Bearing fruit. Ainsworth

FRUCTIFICATION, n. f. [from fructify.]
The act of causing or of bearing fruit;
fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

TO FRUCTIFY, v. a. [from fructify, Fr.]
To make fruitful; to fertilize.

The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howell.

Where'er the looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth.
Granville.

TO FRUCTIFY, v. n. To bear fruit.
It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life.
Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTUOUS, adj. [from fructus, French;
from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
On interlac'd occur, and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound!
Philips.

FRUGAL, adj. [from frugali, Latin; frugal, French.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater to manifold to this one use. Milton.
And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and massin bread.

If through mists he shoots his fallen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drifting day. Dryden's Virgil.

FRUGALLY, adv. [from frugal.] Parli-moniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pafimond his marriage
pretis'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryd.

FRUGALITY, n. f. [from frugalitas, French; frugalitas, Latin.] Thrift; parsimony;
good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.
Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those differing virtues, meet in you. Waller.
In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines:
it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbutnot's John Bull.

FRUGIFEROUS, adj. [from frugifer, Latin]
Bearing fruit. Ainsworth

FRUIT, n. f. [from fructus, Latin; frwyth, Welsh; fruit, French.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shaksp.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By talking of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find.
Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown.
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own.
Blackmore.

3. Production.
The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth. Ephesians.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Can't thou their reek'nings keep? the time
compute,
When their swollen bellies shall enlarge the fruit?
Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?
Su. fr.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying. Saltys.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way.
Proverbs.

FRUITAGE, n. f. [from fruitage, French.]
Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines Yield nectar. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Greedy they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd.
Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.

FRUIT'BEARER, n. f. [from fruit and bearer.]
That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer.

FRUIT'BEARING, adj. [from fruit and bear.]
Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mortimer.

FRUIT'ERER, n. f. [from fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Shakspere.
Walnuts the fruit'er's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRUITERY, n. f. [from fruiterie, French.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.
Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ills, an oriental blait Disasterous thies. Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL, adj. [from fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If the continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n, so small,
Nor glitt'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whole virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth. Milton.

2. Actually bearing fruit.
Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloomed, and fruitful were the next. Shakspere.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:
Into her womb convey sterility. Shakspere.

Male he created thee, but thy comfort
Female for race, then blest'st mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold. Milton.
I have copied nature, making the youths vigorous and the daughters fruitful. Gay.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Adams.

FRUITFULLY, adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolifick.
How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night
And empty space did fruitfully unite. Reveries.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off:
if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shakspere.
Fruitfully abound. Dryden.

FRUITFULNESS, n. f. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Nor can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Rakia's History.

2. The quality of being prolifick, or bearing many children.

The goddess, presents at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd;
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.

Dryden's Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary; I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for.

Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

FRUIT-GROVES. n. f. [from fruit and groves.]

Shades, or cōseplantations of fruit-trees.

The faithful slave,

Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,

To tend the fruitgroves.

Pope's Odyssey.

FRUITION. n. f. [from fruior, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation.

Hooker.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,

Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive

Where I may have fruition of her love.

Shakspeare.

God riches and renown to men imparts,

Ev'n all they wish, and yet their narrow hearts

Cannot so great a fluency receive,

But their fruition to a stranger leave.

Sandys.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,

Naked and unadorned, could find success;

But by fruition, novelty destroy'd,

The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.

Graunville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed.

Rogers' Sermons.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To what our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be when there.

Boyle.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.]

Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth.

Brown.

Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd

What friend the priests by those words design'd

Dryden.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless.

Raleigh's History.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again

Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;

But let me here for aye in peace remain,

Or straightway on that last long voyage fare.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither,

Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t' excess.

Milton.

The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless.

Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,

And put a barren sceptre in my gripe;

No son of mine succeeding.

Shakspeare.

FRUIT-TIME. n. f. [from fruit and time.]

The autumn; the time for gathering fruit.

FRUIT-TREE. n. f. [from fruit and tree.]

A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

Lady, by your wisdom I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops.

Shakspeare.

They possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance.

Nehemiah.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound.

Waller.

I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,

But I'll be master of it.

Shakspeare.

FRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running toward the heel in the form of a fork.

Farrier's Dict.

FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [from frustra, Latin.]

Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it.

Moss.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindnesses, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour.

South.

To FRUSTRATE. v. a. [from frustror, Latin; frustrer, French.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.

It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate.

Hooker.

I survive,

To mock the expectations of the world;

To frustrate prophecies, and to raise out

Rotten opinion.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Stern look'd the fier'd, as frustrate of his will;

Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill.

Dryden.

Not more almighty to resist our might,

Than wife to frustrate all our plots and wiles.

Mil.

2. To make null; to nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances.

Spenser.

Now thou hast aveng'd

Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing

Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,

And frustrated his conquest fraudulent.

Milton.

The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed.

Atterbury.

FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

He is drown'd

Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks

Our frustrate search on land.

Shakspeare's Tempest.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian banished in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate.

Raleigh's History.

All at once employ their thronging darts;

But out of order thrown, in air they join,

And multitude makes frustrate the design.

Dry.

2. Null; void.

For things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith naturally become frustrate.

Hooker.

FRUSTRATE. n. f. [from frustrare, Latin; from frustrare.] Disappointment; defeat.

Is frustrate irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refin'd policies with frustration and a curse.

South.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrare.] Fallacious; disappointing.

Ansler.

FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrare.] That makes any procedure void; that vacates any former process.

Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal.

Asyl.

FRY. n. f. [from froe, foam, Danish, Skinner.]

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us, but as love draws;

He swallows us, and never chaws;

By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;

He is the tyrant pike, and we the fy.

Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,

With fy innumerable swarm, and shoals

Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales

Glide under the green wave in flocks, that oft

Bank the mid-sea.

Milton's Parad. Lost.

The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fy.

So close behind some promontory lie

The huge leviathans t' attend their prey;

And give no chase, but swallow in the fy,

Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.

Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.

Out of the fy of these rakehell horseleves, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their ken continually supplied and maintained.

Spenser.

Them before the fy of children young,

Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,

And to the maidens founding timbrels sung.

Fairy Queen.

Draw me no constellations there,

Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;

Nor any of that monstrous fy

Of animals that stock the sky.

The young fy must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt.

Conte.

FUGITIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One who runs from his station or duty.

Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon.

Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton's Parad. Lost.

We understand by some fugitives, that he hath commanded

The generals to return with victory, or expect A shameful death. Denham's Sophy.

2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.

Too many, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives there abiding.

Your royal highness is too great and too just, either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.

3. One hard to be caught or detained.

What muse but his can Nature's beauties hit,
Or catch that airy fugitive, call'd wit. Harte.

FUGITIVENESS. n. f. [from fugitive.]

1. Volatility; fugacity.

That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn attending in distillation. Boyle.

2. Instability; uncertainty.

FUGUE. n. f. [French; from fuga, Latin] In music, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth, and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon's Nat. History.

The skilful organist plies his grave and fancied defecant in lofty fugues. Milton on Education.

His volant touch
Inflinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

FULCIMENT. n. f. [fulcimen, fulcimentum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.

The power that equiponderates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it, as there is between their several distances from the centre or fulciment. Wilkins.

TO FULFIL. v. a. [full and fill]

1. To fill till there is no room for more.

This sense is now not used.

Six gates 'i th' city, with massy staples,
And responsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shakspeare.

2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.

They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Acts.

The fury hath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To answer any purpose or design.

Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Mil.

4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.

If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whose sake my breast that wound did bear;

And faithfully my last desires fulfill,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden.

5. To answer any law by obedience.

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law, Romans.

'Tis I my glory account
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd declar'st thy will Fulfill'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Milton.

FULFRAUGHT. adj. [full and fraught.]

Fully stored.

Thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the fulfraught man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shakspeare's Henry V.

FULGANCY. n. f. [fulgens, Latin.] Splen-dour; lustre; glitter. Di.

FULGENT. adj. [fulgens, Latin] Shini-

ing; dazzling; exquisitely bright.

As from a cloud his fulgent head,

And shape star-bright, appear'd. Milton.

The illumination is not so bright and fulgent as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of reason. Moré's Divine Dialogues.

FULGID. adj. [fulgidus, Latin.] Shini-

ing; glittering; dazzling.

FULGIVITY. n. f. [from fulgid] Splen-dour; dazzling glitter. Di.

FULGOUR. n. f. [fulgor, Latin.] Splen-dour; dazzling brightness like that of lightning.

Glow-worms alive project a lustre in the dark; which fulgour, notwithstanding, ceaseth after death. Brown.

When I set my eyes on this side of things, there shines from them such an intellectual fulgour, that methinks the very glory of the Deity becomes visible through them. Moré.

FULGURATION. n. f. [fulguratio, Lat.]

The act of lightening.

FULHAM. n. f. A cant word for false dice.

Hammer.

Let virtues gripe thy guts, for gourd and Fulham's hold,
 And high and low beguile the rich and poor.
Shakespeare.

FULIGINOUS. adj. [fuligineux se, French.
fuliginosus, Latin.] Sooty; smoky.

Burrage hath an excellent spirit to repress the fuliginous vapours of dusky melancholy, and to cure madness.
Bacon.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies.
Horvel.

FULIMART. n. s. [This word of which Skinner observes that he found it only in this passage, seems to mean the same with foet] A kind of stinking ferret.

The fitchat, the fulimart, and the ferret, live upon the face, and within the bowels of the earth.
Wulton's Angler.

FULL. adj. [fulle, Saxon; vol. Dutch.]

1. Replete; without vacuity; having no space void.

Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit.
Ecclesiastes.

The trees of the Lord are full of sap.
Psalms.

Where all must full or not coherent be.
Pope.

2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
 He met her full, but full of warefulness.
Sidney.

You should tread a course

Pretty and full of view.
Shakspeare. Cymb.

Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; they taint business through want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.
Bacon.

That must be our cure,
 To be no more; sad cure; for who would lose,
 Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
 Those thoughts that wander through eternity.
Milton.

Gay religion's full of pomp and gold.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
 I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
 Though full of youthful health and pain.
Dryden.

He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compassed about with infirmities which he cannot remove.
Tillotson.

From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his
 fire,
 And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
 Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
 And frames his goddess by your matchless charms.
Granville.

3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing

Full of days was he;

Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see.
Tuck.

4. Plump; saginated; fat.

A gentleman of a full body having broken his skin by a fall, the wound inflamed.
Wifeman.

5. Saturated; fated.

 in effect.

Water digesteth a full meal sooner than any liquor.
Arbutnot.

8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.

That day had seen the full accomplishment
 Of all his travels.
Daniel's Civil War.

What remains, ye gods;

But up and enter now into full bliss?
Milton.

Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered.
Hammond's Practical Catechism.

The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life.
Tillotson.

9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.

At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed.

After hard riding plunge the horses into water,
 and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies.
Swift's Directions to the Groom.

10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.

Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him have left upon my thoughts.
Denham.

Should a man go about with never so fet study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express.
Woodward.

11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.

I did never know to full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the empty vessel makes the greatest sound.
Shakspeare.

Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber,
 make all noises in the same more full and resounding.
Bacon's Natural History.

Dryden taught to join

The varying verse, the full resounding line.
Pope.

12. Mature; perfect.

In the sultanry of the Mamalukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers out of their possessions.
Bacon.

So law appears imperfect, and but given
 With purpose to resign them in full time
 Up to a better covenant.
Milton.

These thoughts

Full counsel must mature.
Milton.

 in its orb.

Towards the full moon, as he was coming home
 one morning, he felt his legs faulter.
Wifeman's Surgery.

14. Not continuous, or a full stop.

Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty sign.
Sidney.

15. Spread to view in all dimensions.

'Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile.
Addison on Medals.

FULL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.

When we return,
 We'll see those things affected to the full.
Shakspeare.

He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full.
Clarendon.

The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by authors to the full.
Dryden.

Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull,
 Are emblems, rather than express the full
 Of what he feels.
Dryden's Persius.

If where the rules not far enough extend,
 Some lucky licence answer to the full
 Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule.
Pope.

2. The highest state or degree.

The swan's down feather,
 That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
 Neither way inclines.
Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. The whole; the total.

The King hath won, and hath sent out
 A speedy power to encounter you, my lord;
 This is the news at full.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
 I knowing all my peril, thou no art.
Shakspeare.

4. The state of being satiated.

When I had fed them to the full.
Jeremiah.

5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.

 fullest in the full of the moon.
Bacon.

FULL. adv.

1. Without abatement or diminution.

The full
 Resplendent all his Father manifest
 Express'd.
Milton.

In the unity of place they are full as frequentious; which many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin.
Dryden's Dramatick Poets.

A modest blush the wears, not form'd by art;
 Free from dust his face, and full as tree his heart.
Dryden.

The most judicious writer is sometimes un-taken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived.
Dryden's Aurengzebe, Preface.

Since you may Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
 The pawn I proffer shall be full as good.
Dryden.

2. With the whole effect

'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it.
Dryden's Disfranchising.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,

This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony,

'Trough all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man.
Dryden.

3. Exactly.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,

An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood.
Alfieri.

Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,

A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play.

4. Directly.

He met her full, but full of warefulness.
Sidney.

He then confronts the bull,

And on his ample forehead aiming full,

The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull.
Dryden.

At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force.

Full at the temples of the warrior horse.
Dryden.

5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their sig-nification.

Tell me why on your shield, so goodly stor'd,

Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?

Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead.
Spenser.

I was set at work

Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking

Either for such men or such business.
Shakspeare.

Full well ye reject the commandment.
Mark.

Adam was all in tears, and to his guide

Lamenting turn'd full sad.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself.
Montaigne.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight.
Dryden.

Full well the god his sister's envy knew,

And what her aims and what her arts pursue.
Dryden.

There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself.
Swift.

FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.

FULL-BLOWN, adj. [full and blown.] 1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.

My glories are past danger; they're full-blown: Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud.

Denham's Sophy.

My full-blown youth already fades apace; Of short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryd.

2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.

He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd, With zeal and equal indignation fir'd; Who at enormous villany turns pale, And rears against it with a full-blown sail.

Dryden's Persius.

Shakespeare's Henry v.

To FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and config'd kisses to them,

He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shaksp.

His greatly bald-pate choir

Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony

They told 'em false for fear. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

FUME. n. f. [fume, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires awhile themselves consume;

But freight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in nectuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with a fume of sighs:
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes.

Shakespeare.

It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes,
as they do in tobacco, or other things, to dry and comfort.

Bacon.

In winter, when the heat without is less,
breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. Saule.

Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.

Power, like new wine, does your weak brain
surprize,

And its mad fumes in your discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

Will I with wine and wassail so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those; that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in grofs.

Bacon.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By the great intercessor; came in sight
Before their father's throne. Milton.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head.

Dryden's Æneid.

Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Sense, as the sp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd.

Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare.

Silenus lay,

Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Rossmun.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have

No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben Jonson.

Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cicero's Phil. Princ.

The first fresh dawn than wak'd the gladden'd race,

Of uncorrupted man, nor blus'd to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the
ground,

The hollow tow'r with clamors rings around. Dryd.

To FUME. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those that serve far hot countries they used at

The souls of roses, and red coral's dust;

And, lo! to make my fumigation good,
Tis mist with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.

FUMINELY. adv. [from fume.] Angily, in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker.

FUMITER. n. f. A plant. See FUMATORY.

Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds. Shakespeare.

FUMOUS. } adj. [fumeus, French; from

FUMY. } fume.] Producing fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumy god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted 'till the day. Dryden.

FUN. n. f. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; frolicksome delight.

There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.

2. Employment; office.

The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.

You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner the very other debt of your calling.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Nor was it any policy, or obstinacy, or partiality of affection either to the men or their functions, which fixed me. King Charles.

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her. Aldrich.

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury.

3. Single act of any office.

Without difference those functions cannot, be orderly sort, be executed. Hooker.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet.

4. Trade; occupation.

Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.

The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.

6. Power; faculty: either animal or intellectual.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nature seems

In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dancing art,
And pours it all upon the peasant part. Pope.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their functions consistent with the common functions of life. Arbutnot.

FUN

FUND. n. f. [fund, French; fundo, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade, And part employ'd to roll the wat'ry tide. Dryd.
In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Addison.

FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Latin, from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

better grown French. Carew.

We may know,
And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to sell the furzes. Dryden's Virgil.

FURZY. adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take.

Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake. Gay.

FUSCATION. n. f. [fuscus, Latin.] The act of darkening or obscuring. Diag.

To FUSE. v. a. [fundo, fusum, Latin.]
To melt; to put into fusion; to liquify
by heat.

To FUSE. v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liquified by heat.

FUSES. n. f. [fuscau, French.]

1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fuse, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

2. A firelock [from fusil, French]; a small neat musket. This is more properly writt'n fusil.

3. FUSES of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty seven seconds. Harris.

4. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.
FUSIBLE. adj. [from fuse] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colors afforded by metalline bodies, either colliques with, or otherwise penetrate into bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. f. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolv'd it into a nobler use. Watson.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

FUSIL. adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable
by heat.

Some, less skillful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil masonry. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The hand ore he drain'd
Into fit molds pour'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Philips.

FUSIL. n. f. [fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musket.

2. [In heraldry; from fusus, Latin.]
Something like a spindle.

Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle: in the ancient coat of Montague, argent three fusils in fesse gules. Peacocks on Blazoning.

FUSILIER. n. f. [from fusil] A soldier armed with a fusil, a musketeer.

FUSION. n. f. [fusio, Latin; fusio,
French.]

1. The act of melting.
2. The state of being melted; or of running with heat.

Metals in fusio do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton's Opt.

middle of the week before; as, might.
The Baron de Saxe to have had generally the same accent; whence your lady's name is pronounced jax.
G.A. had it. [overriding Italian.]
A. [overriding Italian] German droll.
My wife says it is a French word; it means a great deal of nonsense. [overriding! Shepperson]

GAD

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakspere.
The knight did frown submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he discol'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras

GABBLE. v. n. [gabbare, Italian; gabbelen, Dutch.]
1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endo'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakspere.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest rars,
With their horrid gabbling seek the flock their Dydeon's Amiel.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.
Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Shakspere.
Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift

GABBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, to wittem to know, is to know straight our purpose: though's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shakspere.

2. Loud talk without meaning.
Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GABBLER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater;
a chattering fellow.

GABEL. n. f. [gabelle, French; gaballo, Italian; gabel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil,
wine, and tobacco. Addison on Italy.

GABION. n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His bat cry was defended all along with gabions, and catks filled with sand. Knoles.

GABLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable,
French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. [zad, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick,
a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

2. It seems to be used by Shakspere for a style or graver. [from gab, Saxon, a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakspere.

TO GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner, from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterit of the old word agaan, to go.]
To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakspere.
Giving the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclus.

VOL. I.

GAG

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thunged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore. Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

There, shepherd, there, the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echo's moan. Milton
A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their flings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryden.

She wrecks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies fights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a raiding of air and wind. L'Estrange
No wonder then what thoughts should be perpetually thinking from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke

GADDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler;
one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, cudeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclus.

GADDLINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GADFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about;
the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon's Nat. History.

Light fly his humbers, if perchance a flight
Of angry gadflies taken on the head. Thomson.

GAFF. n. f. A harpoon or large hook.

GAFFER. n. f. [gefere, companion,
Saxon.] A word of respect, now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.

For loffe, Thordwell told us by the bye,
Exceeding torow is exceeding dry. Gay's Past.

GATFELS. n. f. [gafelucar, spears, Sax.]
1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.

2. A steel lever to bend crossbows. Ainsw.

TO GAG. v. n. [from gagbel, Dutch, the palate, Mirssheu.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and mimic occasion to him, he is gagged.
Shakspere's Twelfth Night.

There seem'd rebellious logick, gagged and bound. Pope.

GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,

With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden

GAI

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the sham'd shield of slain Sansloy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same ev'ous gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatcht away. Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shakspere.
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Scott's Rob. R.
They from their mothers breasts poor orphans tend,

Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.
I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southey's Oron.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawton should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments that gain assent, are the vouchers and gages of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.

One judges, as the weather declares, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;
Another judges by a finer gage,
An author's principles or parentage. Young.

TO GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

A moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shakspere. Hamlet.

He found the Turkish merchants making merry: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knoles' History.

2. To bind by some caution or surety; to engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time, something too prodigal, Hath left me gaged. Shakspere.

3. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

We shall see your hearing.
—Nay, but I bar to night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shakspere.

TO GAGGLE. v. n. [gagen, gagelen,
Dutch.] To make a noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the settling of the air.
Bacon's Natural History.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voices,
And never want gooseberries or apple-lauce. Ang.

GAILY. adv. [from gay.]

1. Anily; cheerfully.

2. Splendidly. See GAYLY.

GAIN. n. f. [gain, French.]

1. Profit; advantage: contrary to loss.

But what mumps were gain to me, these I counted loss for Christ. Phil.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general content. Raleigh.

Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milton.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains;
for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon's Essays.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight. Digby.

3. Fine; noble; spacious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like hollies hot at hand,
Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle. Shakespeare.

4. Courtlly with respect to ladies.

He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress. Warton.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thompson.

GALLANT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.

—What is't for?

—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor. Shakespeare.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius. Knolles.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their faucions brandish'd at the gilly knight. Dryden.

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no
sprights;

But I'll come dance about your beds at nights. Dryden.

2. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shakespeare.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.

3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

GALLANTLY. adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.

GALLANTRY. n. f. [galanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

The civility of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glaucius's Suppl. Preface.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Despatch, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shakespeare.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their chambers kind. Granville.

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a prostitute; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.

GALLEASS. n. f. [galeas, Fr.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Dict.

My father hath no less

Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses,
And twelve tight galleys. Shakespeare.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses. Addison.

GALLEON. n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or hit on hit by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh's Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons twenty-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles. Bacon's Hist. with Spain.

GALLERY. n. f. [galerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shade. Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Spenser.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakespeare.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas. Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are daily space, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graynt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

Woe adds it to the gallery stands,
And all the thunder of the pit around. Pope.

GALLEYLE. n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of galls and galleyle's; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcid on, being a bluff between a porcelaine and a glass. Bacon's Phys. R. m.

GALLEY. n. f. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from galeon, the swordfish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galleon, galliot.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, galleys, barks, and brigandines. Faust.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of galleys, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Jafon ranged the coasts of Asia the Left in a open boat or kind of galley. Raleigh's Hist.

On poxy ground his galleys in it;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he bid to follow his hawks and his hounds, his deer and his courtships every day, would find the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to his mines and the galleys for his recreation, and to the spade and the mallet for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. Swift.

GALLEYSLAVE. n. f. [galley and slave.]

A man condemned for some crime to row in the galleys.

As if one chain were not sufficient to discipline men, he must be clogg'd with unnumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galleyslaves do enjoy. Bramhall.

Hardened galleyslaves despise manumission. Deans of Paris.

The furies gently dash against the shore,
Flows quit the plums, and galleyslaves throng. Goethe.

GALLIARD. n. f. [gaillard, French, imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius; and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Seldom is a galliard by himself. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a lion. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

You cannot level into dukedoms there. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

If there be any that would take up all the time let him find means to take them out, and bring others on; as musicians used to do with a dance that dance too long galliards. Bacon.

The triple and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion, when galliard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance. Bacon.

GALLIARDISE. n. f. [French] Musement; exuberant gayety. Not in use.

At my nativity my atendant was a well sign of Scorpius: I was born in the plumb hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way to be trusted nor disposed for the ninth and galliardise company. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

GALLICISM. n. f. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before; with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Boingbroke.

In truth I would have gallicisms avoided, but we must keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our literature. Johnson on the Clarendon.

GALLIGASKINS. n. f. [Caliga, Latin; Va conum, Skinner.] Large open boots.

Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long been used
The writer's fury, and encroaching trusts,
By times subdu'd, what will not time subdue. Pope.

GALLIMATIAS. n. f. [gallimatias, Fr.]

Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAUFRY. n. f. [gallimaufre, Fr.]

1. A hotch-potch, or hash of several sorts of broken meat; a medley. Hammer.

GAL

They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry or hodge-podge of all other speeches. Spenser.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

They have a dance, which the wench says is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in it. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The painter, who under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties after the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden's Duress.

3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.

So John affects thy wife.

—Why, sir, my wife is not young.

—He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor.

He loves thy gallimaufry friend. Shakespeare

GA'LLIOT. n. f. [galliotte, French.] A small swift galley.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellefontus with eighty galleys and certain gallies, shaped his course towards Italy. Amiel's History.

GA'LLIPOT. n. f. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outside apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

Here phials in nice discipline are set:

There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth.

Alexandrus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spektator.

Thou that dost Esculapius deride,

And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride. Fenton.

GA'LLON. n. f. [gelo, low Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopp'd. Wifman's Surgery.

GA'LLOON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of clove lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GA'LLOP. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Bucalus, from gal; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear

The galloping of hounds: who was't come by?

Shakespeare's Much Ado.

His steeds will be restrain'd,

But gallop lively down th' western hill. Doune.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain,

His heavy limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,

When half surpris'd, and farring to be seen,

The lecher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryden's Virg.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threaten'd a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan espy

An armed knight towards them gallop fast,

That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Queen.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward,

In a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

GAL

The golden fun

Gallop the roadster in his glitt'ring coach. Shaksp.

Whom doth time gallop withal?

—With a thief to the gallows. Shakspere.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GA'LLOR. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forward, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once. Farrier's Dict.

GA'LLOPPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

To GA'LLOW. v. a. [axelpān, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wretched slaves

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves. Shakspere.

GA'LOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the north; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

GA'LOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglass: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallow signifies an English fervitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then peles grave's armature; and was instead of the footmen that now wear a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hammer, otherwise than Spenser] Soluets among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback

A poss'nt and mighty power
Of gallow glances and stout knives
Is marching hither and in piad away. Shaksp.

GA'LLOW. } n. f. [It is used by some in GA'LLOWS. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowyses. Galgo, Goth.
deal, a, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus furca, Latin; others from גלגל high, others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like galow, to fright, from a Saxon, the gallows being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a champion upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was girded holding a crown of larch, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were delatation of gal is and gallowyses. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallows were on land,

This fellow could not drown. Shakspere.

GAM

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the finart of waps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.

—Ay, and a shiewd unhappy gallows too. Shakspere.

GA'LLOWSFREE. adj. [gallows and free.]

Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowsfree by my consent,

And nothing suttier, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GA'LLOWTREE. n. f. [gallows and tree.]

The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defame,

On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Spenser.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose,

Drops into Styx, and turns a suland goose. Claveland.

GAMBA'DE. } n. f. [gamba, Italian, a

GAMBA'DO. } leg.] Spatterdash; boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

The peitotogger ambles tiber in his gambadoes

once a week. Dennis's Letters.

GA'MBLER. n. f. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary, to game and cheat them.

GA'MBOGE. n. f. A concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia. Hill.

To GA'MBOL. v. n. [gambiller, Fr.]

1. To dance; to skip; to trisk; to jump for joy; to play merry holicks.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol before them. Milton's Par. Lost.

The king of this, and little fairy queen,

Gambols on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

The monsters of the flood

Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,

And heavy whales in awkward measures play. Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madrest

That I have utter'd, I engage to the test,

And I the mat of willie's out, which madrest

Will gambol in a moment. Shakspere's Hamlet.

GA'MBOL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A garden ar had a very comely spaniel, that would be still jumping and leaping upon him, and playing a true and pretty gambol. L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And boasts in gambols trink'd before then borest

god. Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

How wondrously plays his part he,

With such unsustained rambles! Hudibras.

GA'MBREL. n. f. [from gamba, gambella, Italian.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mix'd as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back. Grew.

GAME. n. f. [gaman, a jest, Islandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.
We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game.

2. Jest: opposed to earnest or seriousness.
Then on her head they set a garland green,
And crowned her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.
Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal, to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities?

4. A single match at play.
Mutual vouchers for our fame we find,
And play the game into each other's hand.

5. Advantage in play.
This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other till they see an end of this.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.
If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.

7. Field sports; as, the chase, falconry.
What arms to use, or nets to frame
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
With all the myst'ries of that game.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.
Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his games,
With wit, and hostile game, such as refuse Subjection to his envious tyrannous.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.
The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

10. To play at any sport.
Milo, when entering the Olympick game,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came.

11. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.
Gambling leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind.

12. To play with dice.
Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no
way profits either body or mind.

13. To play with dice.
Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no
way profits either body or mind.

14. To play with dice.
Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no
way profits either body or mind.

15. To play with dice.
Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no
way profits either body or mind.

G A M

Geron, though old, yet gamefome, kept one en with Cosma.
I am not gamefome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

The gamefome wind among her tresses play,
And crouch up those growing riches short.

Belial, in like gamefome mood.
This gamefome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curled or restrained.

GA'MESOMENESS. n. f. [from gamefome.]
Sportiveness; merriment.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamefome.]
Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. f. [from game.]
1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is words for nothing.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art,
The worse man he is.
Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and matadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels.

2. One who is engaged at play.
When lewdly and cruelly play for kingdoms,
The gentle gamester is the fondest winner.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight.

3. A merry frolicsome person.
You're a merry gamester,
My lord Sands.

4. A prostitute. Not in use.
She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester to the camp.

GA'MMER. n. f. [of uncertain etymology;
perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old woman.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as, Gammer Gurton's Needle.

GA'MMON. n. f. [gambone, Italian.]
1. The buttock of a hog salted and dried;
the lower end of the flitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold;
A rufy gammon of some lew'd years old.

2. A kind of play with dice.
The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The founding gammon.

GA'MUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, be lie you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort.

G A N

In songs and alms express their martial fire,
Combat in tilts, and in a fuge expire.

GAN, for began, from gan for begin.
The noble knight 'gan feel
His vital force to faint.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancho, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks, by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Precektus.

Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis
Gemunt onusti, vel fude trans humum
Luctu turba, produlive Sanguineis teneant in uncis.

GA'NDER. n. f. [gandra, Saxon.] The male of the goose.
A deep drinketh the goose as the gander,
One gander will serve five geese.

To GANG. v. a. [gengen, Dutch; gangan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk. An old word not now used, except ludicrously.

But let them gang alone,
As they have biewed, so let them be at home.

Your flaunting beaus gang with their open.
GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

O, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me.

GA'NGHON. n. f. [French.] A kind of flower.
GA'NGLION. n. f. [γᾱγγλῖον.] A tumour
in the tendinous and nervous parts.

Boneletters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumours or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint.

To GA'NGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Pain, cauterized, gangrenate, festered, and mortified, become black, the radical matter or vital sulphur suffering an extinction.

GA'NGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, French;
gangrena, Latin.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrification.

This experiment may be transferred unto the case of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opium.

To GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrenen, French;
from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they set off presently for that the few spirits that remain in these parts are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete.

Gangrened members must be kept away
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay.

G A P

GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immediate

Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification.

Milton's Agonistes.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, to also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out.

Wise man's Surgery.

GA'NGRENOUS. adv. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, leucis-coloured, black and gangrenous.

Arbuthnot

GA'NGWAY. n. f. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other.

Dick.

GA'NGWEEK. n. f. [gang and week.] Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes.

Dick.

GA'NTELOPE. } n. f. [gantlet is only cor-

GA'NTLET. } rupted from gantelope;
gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,

Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryd.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes.

Locke.

GA'NZ. n. f. [ganfa, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And favour strongly of the ganz's.

Hudibras.

GAOL. n. f. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my goal?

Shakspeare

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open
The goal, and let out the prisoners.

Shakspeare.

GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to goal.

Growing vagabonds was chargeable, pesterous,
and of no open example.

Bacon

GA'OLDelivery. n. f. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth or good delivery call.

Davies.

Thick make a general good delivery of souls, not for punishment.

South.

GA'OLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The fleeced gaoler is the friend of men.

Shakspeare.

I know not how or why my furly gaoler,
Hard as his iron, and insolent as pow'r,
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes,
Put off the brute.

Dryden's Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and unmeasured, 'till the death of her gaoler.

Tatler.

GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

1

G A P

Behold the despair,

By custom and covetous pates,

By gaps and opening of gates. Tuffer's Husbandry.

With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Bathes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.

I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, fore the land that I should not destroy it.

Rogers.

2. A breach.

The lots of that city concerned the christian commonweal: in mild miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that hole of christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So it met the Thracian herdsman with the spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And bears him nothing in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of Eng. and pass'd into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well devised, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stop'd.

Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

It you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Nor is it any boteh or gap in the works of nature. More.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were discover'd. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other.

Pope.

8. To stop a GAP. To escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps.

Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap?

Lelley.

GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.]

Having interstices between the teeth.

The weaver, miler, and cook, are distinguished from each other, as much as the mewing boy prioress and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

TO GAPE. v. n. [geapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pe;
Sceme, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakspeare.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that caused gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour.

Virulent.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to die. Steele.

G A P

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,

Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away:
And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find.

Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the mantle meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.

Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.

Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?
And thou, who gap'st for my estate; draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryd.

4. With after.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments?

L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopp'd in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive.
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father.

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell,
doth gape and shut as the oysters do.

Bacon.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven or the refreshments of a shower.

South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vessels. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd
away,

Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.

That all these actions can be performed by argument, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbuthnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a caesura in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my mule can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he.

Johnson.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape to anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresee
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.

11. To stare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together according to the mad imagination of the dawner; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monstrous Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden's Duress.

Were elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjur'd head is bow'd, Betimes retreat. Gay's Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth.

Job.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon; so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

To GAR. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. Obsolete. It is still used in Scotland.

Tell me, good Habbinol, what gars thee greet?
What hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy bigpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lads forlorn? Spenser.

GARB. n. f. [garle, French.]

1. Drefs; clothes; habit.

Thus B hal, with words cloath'd in reason's garb,
Counsell'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth.

Milton.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a peffion of his sick, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of drefs.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Then garb, but not their cloaths did wear.

Denham.

3. Exterieur appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been pleas'd for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GARBAGE. n. f. [garbear, Spanish.]
This etymology is very doubtful.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the limbs,
Longs after for the garbage. Shakespeare.

Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd
Will fate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A flam more senseless than the log's try
Of old auspicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.
Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?

Rojcommon.

When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.
Dryden.

Him vile, that was your garland. Shakespeare.

GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance;
and leck, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Allium, Latin.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles inclosed in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbous on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miles.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying pastes of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Hill.

G A R

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

 Thou must at all no garment wear. Grevelly.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
 And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore. Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed. Addison.
 Let him that fues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontestable sufferance of such small losses. Ketticwell.

GARNER. n. f.

A place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and foyson plenty,
 Buns and garners never empty. Shakespeare.

GATTEN-TREE. n. f. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of it; and Mr. Lye finds gaude,
in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gawardio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy;
a token of joy; thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure.
In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.
It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shaksp.
The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world.

GAV

Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
To give me audience. Shaksp. King Lear.

My love to Herminia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon. Shaksp.
Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans fittest holland bear. Dryden.

To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a guff's feast, and gaud with me,
After to long grief such nativity. Shakspere.

GA'UDERY. n. f. [from gaud.] Finery;
ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaud'ry known.

GA'UDILY. adv. [from gaud.] Showily.

GA'UDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Show-iness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY. adj. [from gaud.] Showy;
splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shaksp.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless

As the gay motes that people the sun-beams.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumage, that hepp'd from side to side.

Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity.

Law.

GA'UDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast;
a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day,
that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Chayne.

GAVE. The preterit of give.

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.

Derham's Physico-Theolog. y.
There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure,
a standard.

This plate must be a gage to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Moxon.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistresses, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from xepanian, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin;
slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

Shakspere's Richard II.

Two masts, gaunt and grim, her flight

purfu'd,

And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embrou'd.

Dryden's Fables.

Must glove this hand. Shaksp. Henry iv.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;

This a gantelet, that a muff. Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,

And others try the twanging bow to bend;

The strong with iron gantelets arm'd shall stand,

Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd.

Who naked wrestled best, belmeard with oil;

Or who with gantelets gave or took the foil.

Dryden's Fables.

The funeral of some valiant knight

May give this thing its proper light;

View his two gantelets; these declare

That both his hands were us'd to war. Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,

Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;

Save and defend us from our ghastly enemies. Come on Protest.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have, as well of ghostly as of carnal things, is in each kind for each known, but the power of God, according to these degrees and times, is in his secret wisdom forth meet, and to be reverently beflowed, that it to dom appear, how all receive, what all stand in need of, it telling hath had. He.

The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly exert greater importance than any harm which the body feels. He.

To deny me the ghostly combat of my conscience, seems a greater barbarity than is exercised by Christians. Ames.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.

Hence will I to my ghostly heart's desire,

His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.

The ghostly father now hath done his turn.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

GIALLALINA. n. f. [Italian.] Earth of a bright gold colour, found in the kingdom of Naples, very fine, and much valued by painters. *Woodward.GIAMBU. n. f. [jambet, Fr.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal Peet capriciously cur'd,

Deep in their flesh, quite through the marrow,

That a huge purple stream adown their giambu falls. Shakspeare.

GIANT. n. f. [geant, French; gigas, Latin.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness.

Now does he feel his axle

Hang loose about him, like a giant's pole

Upon a dwarfish stalk. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high that giants may get through,

And keep their impious turbans on, without

Good-morrow to the fun. Shakspeare's Comedy.

Woman's gentle beam

Could not drop forth such giants rude invention;

Such Ethiop words. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

These faces threaten'ing wars,

Giants of mighty bone, and bold empire. Milton.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Raleigh's History.

The giant brothers, in their camp, have found

I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryden's Am.

By weary steps and flow

The groping giant with a trunk of pine

Explor'd his way. Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely won

Afflicts the chief to avenge his giant son,

Great Polyphemus of more than mortal might. Pope.

GI'ANTESS. n. f. [from giant.] A female giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a gianteess, and lie under mount

Pelion. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Were this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge gianteess. Howe.

G I F

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have. Bacon.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
She cast us headlong from our high estate,
And here in hope of thy return we wait. Dryden
The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,
With nought for nothing, and in parts divide. Dryden's Lullaby

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the favorite of Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life. Swift to Gay

4. That causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,
The giddy precipice, and the dizzying flood. Pope
The sylphs through myrick mazes guide their way,

Through all the giddy crew, they pursue. Pope

5. Headless; thoughtless; incautious; wild.

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone,
And in fantastick measures danc'd away. Rousse
How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed. Clifford

6. Tottering; unfix'd.

As we have pic'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought that Goliath tumbled. Shakespeare

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering intemperance.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion? Shakespeare

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,
Whether those peals of praise be his or no. Shakespeare

To GIDDER. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick. Obsolete.

A sodaine north wind it teht,
With an extream se, quite about againe,
Our whole endeavours; and our course constrain
To giddle round. Chapman

GIDDER-BRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless,
gidder-brain'd als! Orsini's Venice Preserved

GIDDER-HEADED. adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And to mer may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme discrey
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne
That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddy-headed, hear the testimony of Solomon. Burton on Milan holy.

GIDDER-PACED. adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.

More than light airs, and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times. Shakespeare

GIDDER-EAGLE. n. f. [Sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.

These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the jer-eagle. Leviticus

GIFT. n. f. [from give.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. Matthew

But first take back my life, a gift that's left. Dryden's Aurengzebe

2. The act of giving.

Creator bounteous and benign,
Giver of all things good, but fairest this
Of all thy gifts nor envyest. Milton
These all things living gaze on, all things thine
By gift. Milton

G I G

3. The right or power of bestowing.

They cannot give;
For had the gift been theirs, it had not here
Thus grown. Milton

No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South

4. Oblation; offering.

Many nations shall come with gifts in their hand, to give gifts to the king of heaven. Tobit

5. A bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wife. Deuteronomy

6. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To turn a shower of commanded tears,
An unman will do well for such a shift. Shakespeare

She was to elve to art set
The love, not the gift, that led her gifts
Were such as made government well seem'd Unfavourably to bear. Milton

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with anything that gives him an opportunity of exercising his talents. Addison

GIFTED. adj. [from gift.]

1. Given; bestowed.

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in broken fetters, under task,
With my new-won gift strength. Milton

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.

Two of them gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and hallowed the people to dispose them to an insurrection. Dryden

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory. Addison's Freeholder

GIG. n. f. [Etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.

Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should

GIGANTICK. adj. [gigantes, Lat.] Suitable to a giant; big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.

Others in the wall defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milton

I dread him not, nor all his giant brood,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantick size, Goliath chief. Milton

The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders, and gigantick limbs. Dryden

The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope

To GIGGLE. v. n. [gicbelen, Dutch.]

To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.

We show our present joking, giggling race;
True joy confills in gravity and grace. Garrick's Prologue

GIGGLER. n. f. [from giggle.] A laugh-er; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.

A lad wife valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the hid beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert

GIGLET. n. f. [gærl, Saxon; gyl, Dut. gillet, Scottish, is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Out of use.

Young Falbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Shakespeare

No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,
Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn. Pope

4. To brighten; to illuminate.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that vulgar vanishing, superficial thing, that only the apprehension, and plays upon the faculties of the soul. Locke

5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'd gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shakespeare

Yet, oh! the imperfect piece moves more delight;
'Tis gild'd o'er with youth, to catch the sight. Dryden's Aurengzebe

GILDER. n. f. [from gild.]

1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.

Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spurs of the quicksilver. Bacon's Natural History

We have here a gilder with his anvil and hammer. Bacon

2. A coin, from one shilling and six-pence to two shillings.

I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakespeare

GILDING. n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gild-ing, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon

The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy

Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fy's engraver
And I not strip the gilding off a knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope

GILE. n. f. [agu, Spanish; gula, Lat.]

1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.

The leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land, and at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton

G I M

fishes perform respiration under water by the gills.
He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as most fishes, but before them.

GIM. adj. [an old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.

G I N

For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the hour or bit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces.

What's the meaning of all these gimcracks and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedge, and running your lines cross his grounds?

GIMLET. n. f. [giblet, gimblet, French.] A boiler with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit.

GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Winfworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery.

I think by some odd gimmals or device
Then arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do.

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]
1. A trap; a snare.

With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pasture make.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gins,
Hath slain Sir Mordant.

So drives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty,
If those, who have but feints, can shun
The engines that have them annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done,
If I could not thy gins avoid.

I know thy trains,
Though deadly to my coat; thy gins and toils
No more on me have power, their force is null'd.

He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without the expense of cheese and bacon.

Keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from noose gin.

Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.

3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.

The dells would be to flow with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or foughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water drizzling on the side of the gin pump of Mofyn coalpits.

4. [contracted from GENEVA.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper-berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hails the thunder of our laws on gin.

Ginger. n. f. [zinziber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromattick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves.

On waiving ginger round the sheets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow.

GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some aromattick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

You would shake the strength of your displeasure. Shakespeare.

He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner at a time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention. The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal:
the king, somewhat stirred, said, To whom do you appeal? The prisoner answered, from Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear. Bacon's Apophthegms.

from any body.

In oranges the ripping of the rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon.

20. To addict; to apply.

The Helots, of the other file, shutting their gates, gave themselves to bury their dead, to cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies. Sidney.

After man began to grow to number, the first thing we read they gave themselves into, was the tilling of the earth, and the feeding of cattle. Hooker.

Groves and hill-altars were dangerous, in regard of the secret access which people, superstitiously given, might have always thereunto with ease. Hooker.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall. Shakspeare.

Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given. Shaks.

His name is Falstaff; if that man should be jowly given, he deceives me; for Harry, I see virtue in his looks. Shakspeare.

Huniades, the scourge of the Turks, was dead long before; so was also Mathias: after whom succeeded others, given all to pleasure and ease. Koeller's History.

Though he was given to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory. Bacon's Henry VII.

He that gives his mind to the law of the Most High, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients. Ecclesiasticus.

He is much given to contemplation, and the viewing of this theatre of the world. Mare.

They who gave themselves to warlike action and enterprises, went immediately to the palace of Odin. Temple.

Men are given to this licentious humour of scoffing at personal blemishes and defects. L'Estrange.

Besides, he is too much given to horseplay in his raillery; and comes to battle, like a dictator from the plough. Dryden.

I have some business of importance with her;
but her husband is so horribly given to be jealous. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

What can I refuse to a man so charitably given?
 Dryden.

21. To resign; to yield up.

Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;
And to instruct them will not quit the coast. Herbert.

Virtue give's for lost;
Deprest and overthrown, as seem'd;
Like that self-begot'n bird
From out her ashy womb now seem'd. Milton.

Since no deep within her gulph can hold Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,
I give not Heav'n for lost. Milton's Par. Lost.

For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to bid himself a martyr. South.

Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,
He fights this day unarmed, without his rhyme. Dryden.

The parents, after a long search for the body, gave him for drowned in one of the canals. Addison's Spectator.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, 5 M

the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, inasmuch that the people gave him for gone. Addison's Guardian.

22. To conclude; to suppose.

Whence came you here, O friend, and whither bound?

All gave you lost on fair Cyclopean ground.

23. To Give away. To alienate from one's self; to make over to another; to transfer.

The more he got, the more he shewed that he gave away to his new mistress, when he betrayed his promises to the former. Sidney.

If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heav'n's vows, and those are mine;

You give away myself, which is known mine. Shakespeare.

Honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife.

I know not how they sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. Shakespeare.

Love gives away all things, that so he may advance the interest of the beloved person. Taylor.

But we who give our native rights away,
And our enslav'd posterity betray,
Are now reduc'd to beg an alms and go

On holy days to see a puppet-show. Dryden's Fuv.

Alas, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality! Addison.

Theodosius made a private vow never to inquire after Conitancia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized. Addison.

Whatsoever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves: what we bequeath at our death, is given from others only, as our nearest relations. Atterbury.

I used one thing ill, or gave myself so much over to it as to neglect what I owed either to God or the world. Temple.

29. To Give over. To conclude lost.

Since it is lawful to practise upon them that are forsaken and given over, I will adventure to prescribe to you.

'Tis not amiss, e'er y' are giv'n o'er,
To try one desperate medicine more;
And where your case can be no worse,
The desperate is the wisest course. Hudibras.

The abbess, finding that the physicians had given her over, told her that Theodosius was just gone before her, and had sent her his benediction. Addison's Spectator.

Her condition was now quite desperate, all regular physicians, and her nearest relations, having given her over.

Yet this false comfort never gives him o'er,
That whilst he creeps, his vigorous thoughts can soar. Pope.

Not one foretells I shall recover;
But all agree to give me over. Swift.

30. To Give over. To abandon.

The duty of uniformity throughout all churches in all manner of indifferent ceremonies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over. Hooker.

Abdemelech, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became monk. Kneller.

Sleep hath forsook, and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium, as my only cure. Milton.

The cause for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er? Hudibras.

31. To Give out. To proclaim; to publish; to utter.

The fathers give it out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the manhood of Christ. Hooker.

It is given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark

Is, by a forged process of my death, Rankly abused. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

One that gives out himself prince Florizel,
Son of Polixenes, with his princeliness. Shakespeare.

His golden helm gives way with stony blows, Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows. Dryden's Æn.

37. The word give is used with great laxity, the general idea is that of transmitting from one to another.

To Give. v. n.

1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase merely French, and not worthy of adoption.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun; The enemy gives on with fury led. Dryden.
Hannibal gave upon the Romans. Hooker.

2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft, as the crust of bread, bilket, sweetmeats, and salt. Bacon's Natural History.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul, Like season'd timber, never gives; But though the whole world turn to coal, Then chiefly lives. H. Herbert.

Unless it is kept in a hot house, it will give again, that it will be little better than raw malt. Mortimer.

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cock. Mortimer.

3. To move. A French phrase.

Up and down he traverses his ground, Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound; Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel's Civil War.

4. To Give in. To go back; to give way. Not in use.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Hayward.

5. To Give into. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medalists; the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison on Medals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

6. To Give off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reaches the mind. Locke.

7. To Give over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; left, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker.

Give not o'er so; to him again; intreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown, You are too cold. Shakspeare Measure for Measure.

The rate of human actions is so variable, that to try things oft and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Natural History.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought, Yet gives not o'er, though desperate of success. Milton.

Shall we kindle all this flame Only to put it out again?

And must we now give o'er, And only end where we begun?

In vain this mischief we have done,

If we can do no more. Denham.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any further pursuits after fame. Addison.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

8. To Give out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. Acts.

Your ill-wishers will give out you are now going to quit your school. Swift.

9. To Give out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they,

Like moles within us, heave and cast about:

And 'till they foot and clutch their prey;

They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,

That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

GIVER. n. f. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well ye may afford

Our givers their own gifts. Milton's Par. Lost.

By thee how fairly is the giver now

Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost

Long since. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;

The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;

Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

GIVES. n. f. Fetters or shackles for the feet.

GIZZARD. n. f. [gesser, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong musculous stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzern. Mor.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules dutiling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or musculous stomach. Key on the Creation.

They nestle near the thione,

By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind; as, he grets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.

But that which does them great harm,

Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;

Which puts the overheated lots

In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so curiously hid upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Estrange.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it. Locke.

To GLAD. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

He saw rich nectar thaws release the rigour

Of th' icy north; from frost-bound Atlas hands

His adamantyne fetters fall: green vigour

Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Croft.

GLA

It glads me

To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Osway.
Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man. Pope.

If justice Philips' captive head
Some frigid rhymes disburles,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

To GLA'DDEN. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him.

A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it. Addison's Cato.

GLA'DDER. n. f. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
Have pity, goddess. Dryden.

GLADE. n. f. [from glopan, to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glod, and the obsolete English gleed, a red-hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucius. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping, lay in secret shade. Hab. Tale.
O might I here.

In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton's Paradise Lost.
When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.

For noonday's heat are closer harbours made,
And for fresh evening air the op'ner glade. Dryden's Innocence.

There interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.

By the heroes armed shades
Glittering through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh! take the husband or restore the wife! Pope.
She smil'd, array'd

With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,

New dress and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

GLA'DEN. n. f. [from gladius, Latin, a sword.] A swordgrass: a general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.

And there him rests in riotous suffiance
Of all his gladfulness, and kindly joyance. Spenser.

GLADIATOR. n. f. [Latin; gladiator, Fr.] A swordplayer; a prizefighter.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denham.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Persius.

GLA'DLY. adv. [from glad.] Joyfully;

GLA

with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly; Shakespeare's King Lear.
But not one follower.

You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.

GLA'DNESS. n. f. [from glad.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perish'd they deplore. Dryden.

GLA'DSOME. adj. [from glad.]

1. Pleased; gay; delighted.
The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladsome company. Fairy Queen.

The gladsome host in circling troops attend,
And with unweary'd eyes behold their friend. Dryden.

2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day. Prior.

2. A kind of halbert.

To GLAIRE. v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLANCE. n. f. [glantz, German, glitter.]

1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.
His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glances, and grateful steam:
The other's not; for his was not sincere. Milton.

2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.
The aspects which procure love are not gazings,
but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Bacon.

There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity. Dryden.

Boldly she look'd, like one of high degree:
Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;
At which I only joy'd, for truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte.

3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of skveral objects with one glance. Watts on the Mind.

To GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
He doubled blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparksles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly.

Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe.

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright. Shakespeare.

3. To strike in an oblique direction,

GLA

Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,

His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank defends. Pope.

4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.

O'th sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again and kiss. Saunders.

Mighty dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;

And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope.

5. To censure by oblique hints.

How can't thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Thebes? Shakespeare.

Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.

I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison.

He had written verses wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor famous for dulness. Ser.

To GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.

Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakespeare.

GLANCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.

Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokingly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hukewill on Providence.

GLAND. n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, French.] The glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes.

A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abscess begun deep in the body of the glands.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twist'd with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Bl. chor.

GLANDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Farrier's Dict.

The beaver's legs are no testicles, or parts of- ficial unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandu- lous tumours, and ruptures of the lymphatics. Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell, And like the brand of foul Alecto flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigram- matic wit, and gross hyperboles; he maintains modesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glares not, and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to fight; The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden's Æneid.

Alas, thy dazzled eye

Beholds this man in a false glaring light, Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes, Which thou dost glare with. Shaksp. Tit. And.

Look, how pale he glares! Shaksp. Ham.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;

But when they met they made a furly stand, And glaz'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd, And with'd that every look might be their last. Dryden's Fables.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest or most correct. Elton.

TO GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them roil'd, and every eye Glaz'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire

Among th' accus'd, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden's Fables.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in his chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flam- beams. Addison's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air, And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare, She sighs for ever. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

GLEAM. n. f. [gelioma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Thou art the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Autonian stream. Spenser.

GLE

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast.
Dryden's Aurengzeb.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams
Fires that glow. Pope's St. Cecilia.

TO GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.

She went by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palemon's fields. Thomson.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather,
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shakspere's Hamlet.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Shakspere's Henry VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear. Dryden's Æneid.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virgil.

GLEANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,

GLE

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLEBE. n. f. [glebe, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in sedge bowers;

The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers

Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton.

Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to-day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliff's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Duffy.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant feeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prin.

GLIB. adj. [from luis. Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Burnet's Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope compactly twisted together, with a noose that slip as glib as a birdcatcher's gin.

Arbutnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

GLI

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare's King Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:
And then, to make them pass the glibber, Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Cibber. Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB. n. f.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bath of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disfiguring them. Spencer on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue. Shakespeare.

GLIBLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose promises as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.

Government of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. f. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold
The rock. Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [gliban, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By east, among the Jutty valleys glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Fairfax.

Glide under the green wave. Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart.

Dryden's Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear. Dryden.

GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck
A green and glided snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indenting glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like it.

GLIDER. n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into my heart did glide;
Hoy to the glider;
Therewith my soul was sharply glide,
Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser.

GLI

GLIKE. n. f. [glig, Saxon. See GLEEM.] A sneer; a scoff; a scout. Not now in use.

Where's the bastard's-braves, and Charles his glikes. Shakespeare.

To GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

—And on my side it is so well appareld,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her. Milton.

See'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Sive what the glimmering of those livid flames Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Par. Lost.

The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night

A glimmering dawn. Milton's Par. Lost.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll,
The rising motion of an infant ray,
Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimmering socket dies.

Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lully mals. Pope.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the hayage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were.

Watson.

The pagan priesthood was always in the druids;
and there was a perceptible glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

GLIMMER. n. f. [from the verb]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic: talc, catcliver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMPSE. n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast town in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short fighited reason having got some faint glimpse of,
we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpse they ran? Milton.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires,
My manhood, long mist by wand'ring fires, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,

My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place. Cowley.

If I, celestial fire, in sight
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grace'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath.

Not easily'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.
Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakspeare.

To GLITTER. v. n. [glittan, German; glitteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in summer, and the helmets glitter brightest in the fairest sunshine.

Spenser on Ireland.

'Tis better to be lowly born,

And range with humble livers in content,

Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,

And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare.

The golden sun

Gallops the zodiac in his glittering coach. Shakspeare.

All that glitters is not of gold. Shakspeare.

You were more the eye and talk

Of the court to-day, than all

Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson

When the sun thone upon the shields of gold and brads the mountains glister'd therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. Maccabees.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glister'd prettily. Boyle.

GLISTER. n. s. [properly written clyster, from κλυστω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.

Now enters Bush with new state airs,

His lordship's premier minister;

And who, in all profound affairs,

Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Boerhaave.

To GLITTER. v. n. [glitzman, Saxon.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Steeple-houses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade.

Bacon's Phys. Rem.

Before the battle joins, from afar

The field yet glitters with the pomp of war.

Dryden's Virgil.

Scarcely hadst thou time to unsheath thy conquering blade;

It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Deasy of Piety.

In glittering bones, o'erbat our heart severe;
In crowns collected; and in courts unsever.
Young.

GLITTER. v. s. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.

Clad

With what permissive glory since his fall

Was left him, or false glitter. Milton.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in

it. Collier on Pride.

Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Laro.

GLITTER AND Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

Finding his royal enemy betray'd,

Wept at his fall. Stepney.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars,

Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye

Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Chawland.

These are the stars,

But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find

Such figures as are in globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round

A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd,

With bright emblazoning, and horrent arms. Milton.

All thy dominion, Adam, is no more Than what thy garden is to all the earth,
And all the firm from one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then form'd the moon

Globe, and every magnitude of star. Milton.

GLOBOSITY. n. s. [from globosus.] Sphericality; sphericalness.

Why, the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly,

where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionally, 'till at last it appear not at all; no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin. When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.]

Spherical; round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far

'Than all this globe earth in plain outspread

Such are the courts of God! Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge

Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;

Large globous irons fly, or dreadful hits,

Singeing the air. Phillips.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Lat.] Having the form of a small sphere; round;

spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids

laire, French.] A fuscous flower. Miller.

GLOBULE. n. s. [globule, French; globulus,

Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical

which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope.

These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver. Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo.

Newton's Optick.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbutnot on Alim.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the frith. Boyle.

To GLOMERATE. v. a. [glomerare, Latin.]

of thread.

GLOOM. n. f. [glomanz, Saxon, twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dimness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

This the feat,
That we must change for heav'n? This mournful gloom,

For that celestial light? Milton's Paradise Lost.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell,
Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black
air

Accompany'd; with damps, and dreadful gloom.

Milton.

Now warm in love, now withering in thy bloom.

I sit in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; fullness.

TO GLOOM. v. n. [from the noun.]

GLOOMINESS. n. f. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dimness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and inconvertible.

Collier of the Splend.

The gloominess in which sometimes the mind of the best men are involved, very often stands in use of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.

Addison.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing miseries, which Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade.

To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,

Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome moon.

Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier,

just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field

Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,

Herself a fairer flow'r by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLORIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory;

dignified with honours. Not in use.

Old respect

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,

My son now captive, hither hath inform'd

Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age

Came lagging after. Milton's Agonistes.

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification,

French, from glorify] The act of giving glory.

Vol. I.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

TO GLORIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French;
glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,

Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shalps.

Justice is their virtue, that alone

Makes them fit sure, and glorifies the throne.

Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.

Hoelder.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alledged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hocker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shalps.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Psalms.

Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.

Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end: and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.

Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorifies his pregnant pot,

If by the way to him befall,

Some odorous thing, or medicinal. Donna.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. John.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified.

Romans.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified;

then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Parsons.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner.

Aylmer's Paragon.

GLORIOUS. adj. [gloriosus, Latin;

glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious;

for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only

God, and glorious over the whole world. Daniel.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendour of his celestial body, still made more glorious and majestic by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal Judge.

Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,

'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;

If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,

He now defends the cause that once was thine.

Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,

And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Alf. n. Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight. Lart.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness.

Lave.

GLORIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They shine with the celestial flames which shine to gloriously in their works. Dryden.

Great wit, sometimes may gloriously offend,

And rise to faults true censors dare not mend.

Pope.

GLORY. n. f. [gloire, French; gloria,

Latin] Among the old poets, it was used sometimes as one syllable, glare.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. Lat.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and at-terwards receive me into thy glory. Psalms.

Then enter into glory, and refuse

His seat at God's right hand, exalted high

Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to beleeve and interact God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.

Lave.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

'Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,

'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,

Each soldier longing for near coming glory.

Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,

There have been fewer friends on earth than kings.

Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea.

Burnet.

Your sex's glory, 'tis to shine unknown,

Of all applause be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these. Matthew.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,

Returning, you adorn the town;

And with a brave revenge do show

Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground

converte with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,

And faints embrace thee with a love like mine.

Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in pictures.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace;

such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends.

Sutb's Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness

in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinctness, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.

Calver of the Aspid.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLO'RY v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorying when he had hap-pened to do a thing well, as when he had perform-ed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own pro-ceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakspeare.

Your glorying is not good. 1 Corinthians.

Thou hast seen Mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison's Cato.

This title of freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to at-tend on him at his altar. Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to colloque.

Hammer. See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture ex-plained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatter'ing gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howell.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blas-phemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wife discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.
Explaining the text in short glosses was Acur-sius's method. Butler on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has per-haps some affinity to glow.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was under each enveloped with gold,
Whose glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss dis-covers,

To men that understand you, words and weak-nesses. Shakspeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glosses. Shakspeare.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well, for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Woods that the wind did tofs

The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss,

Like that of oil. Chapman's Iliads.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to spon upon the face of this cause any false gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooper, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakspeare.

The common gloss Of theologians. Milton.

To GLOSS. v. n. [glosser, French, from the noun.]

1. To comment.

Thou detain'st Brifeis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryden.

2. To make fly remarks.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing, gloss'd, that Abia serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws,
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Phillips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Persius.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when de'strum was ap-plied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo de'strum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries.

I could add another word to the glossary. Butler.

GLOSSATOR. n. f. [glossateur, French; from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is be-cause his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence; but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayiffi.

GLOSSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from gloss.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [glove, Saxon, from klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

'They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;
For haste some left their marks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find. Dryden.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his arm
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now engag'd with grief,

Are thine themselves: hence, therefore, thine nice crutch,

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

The next he lays on is her palm,
That alms'ner of tranquillizing balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once removed;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glove'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round head
Glover's paining knife? Spenser.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pour; to look fullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and steals
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glouting round her neck, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glo'ing with gall a sight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blatted with each lock. Garril.

To GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; glayen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But substance silence be Teneth not my fire,
But told a flames, as I sudden it does glowe,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the fles and numbers of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Their office upon a tawny front. Shakspeare

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to shew her innocency, did take seven glowing henns, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike infor'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Quixot.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

GLO

Fires that glow, wicks of woe. Pope.

To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow.
the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison's Cato.

A malicious joy,
whose red and fiery beams cast through your vintage. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;

such heavenly figures from his pencil flow,
so warm with life his blended colours glow, admit the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse.
Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleading Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.
Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well.

The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison.
For'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;

The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will little into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace, Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Levir.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a fullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To Glow. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare.

Glow. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.
Such as suppose that the great Nile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and buffe of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.

GLU

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm.] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matten to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shakespeare.

A great light drowneeth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;

For life it had, and like those jewels shone -
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Informed, he threw the worthless worm away. Wall.

To GLOZE. v. a. [glezan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glowing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Parad. Lost.
So glow'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.

A false glowing parasite would call his fool-hardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, became blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glowing speech,
Far protestations, specious marks of friendship. Philips.

2. To comment. This should be glofs.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare Henry v.

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; glofs. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are flaked with a fever;

If them a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney.

GLOZEN. n. f. [from gloze.] A flatterer.

GLUE. n. f. [glu, French; gluten, Lat.
glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a jelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Nat. History.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best. Monon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue'd many friends to thee. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glue a potsherd together. Ecclus.

The custom of crowning the holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinzel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Derham.

GLU

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneous hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men plunged in their lust and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glue'd,
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.

GLUEBOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUER. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well what then? Guardian.

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio,
Latin, to swallow; γλῦω.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

'Till cramm'd and gorg'd, night burst
With fuck'd and glutted off. Milton.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.

What may remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
'That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Hen.

I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the laud, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To oversil; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbutnot.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.

GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Dilgorged soul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death
 Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
 Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw. Milton.
 Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.
 A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, call me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Def.

3. More than enough; overmuch.
 If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.
 4. Any thing that fills up a passage.
 The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward.
GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French; from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.
 The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects; the one that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon's Natural History.
 Next this marble venom'd feat,
 Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
 Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.
GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.
 There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.
GLUTTON. n. f. [glouton, French; from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]
 1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.
 The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catflesh baked. Bacon's Natural History.
 Through Macer's gullet the runs down
 While the vile glutton dines alone;
 And, void of modesty and thought,
 She follows Bibo's endless draught. Prior.
 If glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Laric.
 2. One eager of any thing to excess.
 The rest bring home in state the happy pair
 To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
 All those free joys infinitely to prove,
 With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.
Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
 Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.
TO GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.
GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.
 When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
 And take down th' interest in their gluttonous maws. Shakespeare.
 The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Ruleigh.
 Well observe
 The rule of not too much, by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.
GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, French; from glutton] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holiday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts, On cition tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.

We'll may they fear some miserable end, Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juvenal.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUY. adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spinous matter. Hurvey on Conf.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and glyns under the mountain's foot. Spenser.

TO GNAR. } v. n. [gnýnpan, Saxon; gnorren, Dutch.] To growl; to murmur; to snarl.

 And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
 The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare's Richard II.

The gnarling porter durst not whine for doubt;
 Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.

GNARLED. adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.
 Merciful heav'n!

Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
 Split'st the unyedgeable and gnarled oak,
 Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

TO GNASH. v. a. [knaschen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.

The peer, who could not yet this wrath as-swage,
 Row'd his green eyes, that sparkl'd with his rage,
 And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden's Virgil.

TO GNASH. v. n.

1. To grind or collide the teeth.
 He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matthew.

2. To rage even to collision of the teeth; to fume; to growl.

His great iron teeth he still did grind,
 And grimly gnash'd, threatening revenge in vain. Spenser.

55. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.
In argument with men a woman ever Goes by the worst, whatever be her cause. Milton.
He's sure to go by the worst that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Estrange.
56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.
'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp's Surgery.
57. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not rejected.
Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Estrange.
Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.
If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.
Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffee-house, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.
58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.
The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Psalms.
59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.
He shall go in and out, and find pasture. John.
60. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to debase.

I would the friends we miss were safe arrived :
Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakf.

In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shakf.

62. To Go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,
Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd so to daring, as he would Go on upon the gods. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.

63. To Go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Sidney.

He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleased with it, whoever is the instrument. Taylor.

I have escaped many threats of ill fits by these motives: if they go on, the only police I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine for ever in new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable. Addison.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease; but when the ex-pectoration goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it. Arbutnot.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest. Swift.

When we had found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary explications. Swift.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.

64. To Go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money. Swift.

65. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have pricked me: there are other men fatter to go out than I. Shakf. ant.

66. To Go out. To be extinguished.

'Thou'lt thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shakf. ant.

Spirit of wine burned till it goes out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon's Not. Hist.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about:
And all her early fires again go out. Dryden.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered. Collier.

My blood runs cold, my hearts forgets to leave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure. Add.

And at her felt approach and secret night,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope.

67. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

He much scared the earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it. South.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money,
in order to go through their part of the expence.

Addison on the War.

68. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation. Arbutnot.

69. To Go upon. To take as a principle.

This supposition I have gone upon through those papers. Addison.

70. The senses of this word are very indistinct; its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come.

This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away and to-morrow comes.

Go to. interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son
Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow:
Let me be clear of thee. Shakf. ant.

My favour is not bought with words like these:
Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale. Rowe.

Go BETWEEN. n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shakf. ant.

Go BY. n. f. Deception; artifice; circum-vention; overreach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the ready upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect.

Collier on Pride.

Go CART. n. f. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are enclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are try'd in Go-carts, to keep their steps from slung,
When members hurt, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

GOAD. n. f. [gad, Saxon.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Of in his harden'd hand a goad he bears.

Pope.

To GOAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.

2. To incite; to stimulate; to incite; to drive forward.

Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shakf. ant.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues. Shakf. ant.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryd.

GOAL. n. f. [gaul, French, a long pole, set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race;

the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And the slope fun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing towards the other goal. Milton.

2. The starting post.

Halt thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden's Virgil.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some here unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for goal, or jail.

GOAR. n. f. [gorar, Welsh] Any edging, sewed upon cloth to strengthen it. Skinner.

GOAT. n. f. [gāt, Saxon and Scottish.]
A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew. Shakf. ant.

We Cyclops care not for your goat-fid love,
Nor other bleat ones; we are better farr. Chapm.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their papermills upon goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peacem.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty love,
The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,

Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid
With heav'n, and duty rais'd the pious maid.

Greec.

GOATBEARD. n. f. [goat and beard; barba capri.] A plant.

GOATCHAFER. n. f. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOATHERD. n. f. [gāt and hērd. Sax.
a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not think same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whole straying herd himself doth shroud
Among the bushes rank? Spenser's Pastoral.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the maquis and his servant chased the kid about the flock. Wotton.

GOATMARJOKAM. n. f. The same with GOATBEARD.

GOAT'S MILK. n. f. [goat and milk. This is more properly two words.]

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, ass's and goat's milk may be necessary.

W'son's Surgery.

GOATMILKER. n. f. [goat and milk.]

A kind of owl so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOATS RUE. n. f. [galega] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and indorick. The Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no effect. Hill.

GOATSKIN. n. f. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hand's divine
With water one, and one with fable one. Pope.

GOATS-THORN. n. f. [goat and thorn.]

An herb.

GOATFISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality; as ranknels, lust.

GOB

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and rusts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal.
Mare against Atheism

GOB n. f. [gobe, French.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do it think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money.
L'Estrange.

GOBBET n. f. [gobe, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith the spew'd, out of her filthy maw,
A flood of poison, horrible and black,
Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw.
Spenser.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

The cooks, biting it into little goblets, pick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace.
Stanh's Travels.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd.
Addison.

To GOBBET v. a. [from the noun.]

To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and goblets up both together.
L'Estrange.

To GOBBLE v. a. [gobber, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them.
L'Estrange.

Of last year's corn in barn great store;
Fat turkies gobbling at the door.
Prior.

The time too precious now to waste,
And supper gobbled up in haste,
Again afresh to cards they run.
Scott.

GOBBLER n. f. [from gobble] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GOBLET n. f. [goblet, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

My sign'd goblets for a dish of wood.
Shaf.

We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
But free from surfeits our repose is found.
Denham.

Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.
Dryden.

GOBLIN n. f. [French; gobeline, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin is Gurph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elfe is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eilff uisbon, are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named gobaldi, from which gobeline might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell!
Shakespeare.

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
Art thou that traitor angel?
Milton's Par. Lost.

GOD

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark.
Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elinor, who overcame
The wicked goblines in bloody field;
But Elinor was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal dal Panthea build.
Spenser.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; flout in up their sinews
With aged cramps.
Shakespeare's Temp.

Mean time the villain razes up the fire,
While well attended, in as well believ'd,
Head solemn goes the goblin story round.
Thomson.

GOD n. f. [gob, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.
John.

Deal between thee and me.
Shakespeare.

All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ dwells in them all.
Pearson.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy.
Greco's Cosmology.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed.
Exod.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

Strong god of aims, whose iron sceptre tways
The freezing north, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracian's winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most.
Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly.
Philippians.

I am not Licio,
But one that seems to live in this disguise,
For such a one as I: 'tis a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a collium.
Shakespeare.

To GOD v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay *god*d me, indeed.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

GO'DCHILD n. f. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a christian.

Shakespeare.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a *godde*s, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love.
Shakespeare.

I long have waited in the temple nigh,
Built to the gracious *godde*s Clemency;
But reverence thou the pow'r
Dryden.

From his seat the *godde*s born arose,
And thus undaunted spoke.
Dryden's Fables.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of *godde*s, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty.
Addison.

GOD

Modesty with-held the *godde*s' train.

Resembling a *godde*s.

Then female voices from the shore I heard;
A maid amidst them *godde*s-like appear'd.
Pope.

GO'DFATHER n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour, as to stand godfather to his child.
Bacon's Henry vi.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this confirmation, bringing some godfather with him, not as in baptism, as his procurator.
Milton's Par. Lost.

GO'DHEAD n. f. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

Be content.
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift.
Shakespeare.

At the holy mount
Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and fair;
The final pow'r arriv'd.
Milton's Par. Lost.

So may thy godhead be confest,
So the returning year be blest.
Pope.

2. A deity in person; a god or *godde*s.
Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods.
Shakespeare's Tem.

Adorning first the genius of the place,
The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown.
Dryden's And.

GO'DLESS adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known.
Hobbes.

That godless crew
Rebellious
Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Hum his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus into banishment
Dryden.

GO'DLIKE adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild.
Milton.

Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of favour to mankind, and which way best Publish his godlike office now mature.
Milton.

That prince shall be to wife and *godde*s, as by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind.
Locke.

GO'DLING n. f. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brass.
Dryden's Juv.

GO'DLINESS n. f. [from godly.]

1. Piety to God.

2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God.

And thank us for your trouble. Shakespeare.

GOL. adj. [golap, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hoproots so well chosen let skillful go set;
The golier and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tuff.

GOL. n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The gol back. Shakespeare's Cymb.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate
them.

But gol backward. Shakespeare.
Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those *gol*s between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer,
that he was no graceful gol. Wotton.

A double mantle, cast
A'thwart his shoulders, his faire *gol*s grac'd
With fitted floes. Chapman.

TO GOLGLE. v. n. To look askint.

Infam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and golgle like an owl. Hudibras.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor golgling eyes did want. Dryden.

GOLGLE-EYED. adj. [yegel, eyen, Sax.] Squint eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be golgle-eyed themselves. Afham.

Vol. I.

GOLING. n. f. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylor's tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenchers suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see'st,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakespeare.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight: that is the twentieth part of their going. Grew's Cosmogonia Sacra.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton.

GOLIA. n. f. The fame with CYNATIUM
In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make

GOLD. n. f. [gold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geol, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelden, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peachum on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most durable, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air, or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils]

Gold hath these natures; greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.]

Ah! Buckingham, now do I pry the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakespeare.]

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.]

The gold fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.]

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakespeare.]

Thou that so stoutly hadst resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakespeare's Henry VI.]

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσὸν ἄγαθόν; and animæque morefque aureos educt in astra. I orate

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare.]

GOLD OF PLEASURE. n. f. [myagrism] A plant.

GOLDBEATER. n. f. [gold and beat] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.]

GOLDBEATER'S SKIN. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.]

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the god, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower can burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeaters skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer.]

GOLDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow is like the first. Shakespeare's Macbeth.]

GOLDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were redhot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakespeare.]
Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.]

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent

No sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bottom of the deep. Shakespeare.]

'Tis better to be lowly born
Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare.]
Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Greaves.]

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er the flames all golden to you now. Dryden.]

And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.]

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.
Golden rustling hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and useth of a yellow colour. Mortimer.]

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakespeare's Macbeth.]

That verse which they commonly called golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.]

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts' Logic.]

and good will towards men.
L. k.

Without good-nature man is but a better kind of villain.
Bacon.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love;
Good nature now and passion strive
Which of the two should be above,
And laws unto the other give.
Suckling.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men.
Ducy of Pitty.

When you shall see him, fir, to die for pity,
'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,
'Twould make the people think you were good
natur'd.
Denham.

To teach him sometimes to love and be good natured to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man.
Locke.

Good sense and good nature are never separated,
though the ignorant world has thought otherwise.
Dryden.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original fignification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use.

Dryden.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of men's proportionable good will
to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution?
Spratt.

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind.
Colemy.

How could you chide the young good natur'd
prince,
And drive him from you with so stern an air.
Addison's Cato.

26. Favourable; loving.

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt.
Samuel.

Truly God is good to Israel even to such as are of a clean heart.
Psalms.

You have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you.
1 Thessalonians.

This idea must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination.
Locke.

27. Companionable; sociable; merry.
Often used ironically.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well.
Clarendon.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship.
Locke.

It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow in his youth.
Arbutnot.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of flight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause.
Shakspeare.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.
Addison's Spectator.

29. In a ludicrous sense.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lause themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well vintess.
Spenser.

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious.

He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath, and willing by good will, obeyed.
Sedgely.

The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it.
Tim. l.

Good will, she said, my want of strength supplies;

And diligence shall give what age denies.
Dryden.

31. In Good time. Not too fast.

In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools.
Collier in Henry's Reign.

32. In Good faith. Really; seriously.

What, must I hold a candle to try good faith?
They in themselves, good faith are too too light.
Shakspeare.

33. Good. [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.

There died upon the place all the chiefs, and all making good the fight without any ground given.
Bacon's Henry viii.

He forced them to retire in spite of their dis-gowns, which were placed there to make good their retreat.
Cromwell.

Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminant rights of the household of faith, then to make good that claim, we are obliged above others to conform to the proper manners and virtues that belong to this household.
Spratt.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues;
As honour made him first the danger choose,
So still he makes it good on virtue's tree.
Dryden.

34. Good. [To make.] To confirm; to establish.

I farther will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good.
Shakspeare.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour found'd and the apostles gathered, was to receive a constant and perpetual acception.
Pearson.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good.
Smalridge.

35. Good. [To make.] To perform.

While she to far extends her grace,
She makes but good the promise of her face.
Wallis.

36. Good. [To make.] To supply.

Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another.
L'Estrange.

Good n f.

1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil or misery.

I fear the emperor means no good to us.

Shakspeare's Titus Andronicus.

Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me.
Shakspeare.

He was d indifferently 'twixt them, doing neither good nor harm.
Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Love with fear the only Good,
Merciful over all his works, with good
Sustaining evil.
Milton.

God is also in sleep, and dreams advise,
Which he hath sent preptious, some great good Predicting.
Milton.

Nature in man's heart, her laws doth pen,
Pretending truth to wit, and good to will.
Davies.

The lessening or escape of evil is to be reckoned under the notion of good: the lessening or loss of good is to be reckoned under the notion of evil.
Wilkins.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them
the necessity of examining more than they do.
Locke.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us; or else to procure or preserve us in the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil.
Locke.

Retire to leave thy destin'd charge too soon,
And for the church's good defer thy own.
Prior.

Works may have more wit than does them
good,
As bodies perish through excess of blood.
Pope.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force.
Rogers.

2. Prosperity; advancement.

If he had employ'd
Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature
Unto the good, not ruin of the state.
Bacon's Juvenal.

3. Earnest; not jest.

The good woman never died after this, 'till she came to die for good and all.
L'Estrange.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety; the contrary to wickedness.

Depart from evil and do good.
Psalms.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify;
but no good, no not a purposed good, can make evil good.
Holyday.

O now, like one of us is Man become,
To know both good and evil, since his taste
Of that detested fruit, but let him boast
He know'd, and of good lost, and evil got,
Happier had it still 'd him to have known
Good by itself, and evil not at all.
Milton.

Enjoy of all good, wherein consists Woman's domestic honour, and chief praise.
Milton.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called bonum Longum, ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile or juvandum, hardly come into my account here.
Soul.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,
Truth, honour, all that is compris'd in good.

Dryden.

5. Good placed after had, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious: and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See Good. adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves.

South.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society.

L'Estrange.

Good. adv.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.
2. As Good. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side,
As Good have grown there still a lifeless rib.

Milton.

Says the cuckoo to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons?

L'Estrange.

Good. interjection. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

Good-conditioned. adj. Without ill qualities or symptoms. Used both of things and persons, but not elegantly.

No surgeon dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned.

Sharp's Surgery.

Good-now. interjection.

He had not made them any recompence for their goodly houses and olive gardens, destroyed in the former wars.

Knolles.

The goodliest man of men since born
His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.

Milton.

Of the fourth Edward was his noble long;
Fierce, goodly, valiant, beautiful, and young.

Waller.

Not long since, walking in the field,
My nurse and I, we there beheld

A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,
I would have pluck'd.

Waller.

How full of ornament is all I view
In all its parts! and seems as beautiful as new:
O goodly order'd work! O pow'r divine!
Of thee I am, and what I am is thine!

Dryden.

His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew;
Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind.

Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling; affectedly turgid.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every clink,
Goodly and great he sails behind his link.

Dryden.

3. Happy; deliverable; gay.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately injured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor.

Spenser.

We have many goodly days to see.

Shakspeare.

Goodly. adj. Excellently. Obsolete.

Their Alma, like a virgin queen most bright,
Doth flourish in all beauty excellent;
And to her guests doth bounteous banquet dight,
Attemper'd goodly well for health and for delight.

Spenser.

Goodlyhood. n. f. [from goodly.] Grace; goodness. Obsolete.

But mote thy goodlyhood forgive it me,
To meet which of the gods I shall thee name.

Spenser.

Goodman. n. f. [from good and man.]

Old goodman Dobson of the green, Remembers he the trees has seen.

Swift.

Goodness. n. f. [from good.] Desirable qualities either moral or physical; kindness; favour.

If for any thing he loved greatness, it was because therein he might exercise his goodness.

Sidney.

There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness.

Hooker.

All goodness

Is poison to thy stomach.

—Yes, that goodness.

Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:

The goodness of your intercepted packets

You writ to the pope against the king: your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

There's no goodness in thy face.

Shakspeare.

There is a general, or natural goodness in creatures, and a more special or moral goodness.

Perkins.

The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose.

Tillotson.

All made very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men.

Clarendon.

No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself; one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness.

Locke.

Goods. n. f. [from good.]

1. Moveables in a house.

That giv't to such a guest
As my poor selfe, of all thy goods the best.

Chapman.

2. Personal or moveable estate.

To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Cattles, and whatsoever.

Shakspeare Henry VIII.

This hinders nothing the proceedings of the civil courts, which respect the temporal punishment upon body and goods.

Lisle.

3. Wares; freight; merchandize.

Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva, arrested likewise the goods of the Low Dutch here in England.

Raleigh's Essay.

Salée, that scorn'd all pow'r and laws of men,
Goods with their owners hurrying to their den.

Waller.

Goodly. n. f. [corrupted from good wife.] A low term of civility used to mean persons.

Soft, goodly sheep, then said the fox, not so;
Unto the king to rash you may not go;

Hubbert's Tale.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when goodly Dobson dy'd.

Gay.

Plain goodly would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her program gown.

Swift.

Goodyship. n. f. [from goodly.] The quality of a goodly. Ludicrous.

The more shame for her goodyship,
To give to near a friend the slip.

Hudibras.

GOOSE. n. f. plural geese. [Gor, Saxon; goer, Dutch; gaws, Erse, sing. gewy, plural.]

1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted, I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced lown,
Where got'st thou that goose look?

Shakspeare.

Since I pluck't geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately.

Shakspeare.

Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan.

Pearson on Drawing.

Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese,
Disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace.

Dryden's Fables.

No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

GORBELLY. n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Juinus. It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or german's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch;

GORGED. adj. [from gorge.] Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gorge'd lark to far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakspere.

GORGEOUS. adj. [gorgeios, old French. Skinner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace! Shakspere.

As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer. Shaksp.
He bad them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hayward.

The gorgeous east, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold. Milton.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain. Shakspere.

GOSHAWK. n. f. [γορ, goofe, and hawc, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at gothawks sight aghast. Fairfax.

GOOSING. n. f. [from goose.] 1. A young goofe; a goofe not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and waggling so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goofe to her goosing. L'Estrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of goosins to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL. n. f. [χορηγία, or God's or good tidings; εὐαγγέλιον; sofel, sheal, suach, happy tidings, Erie.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

All the decrees whereof scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation. Hammond.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel? Bentley.

2. Divinity; theology.

TO GO'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakspere, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony; I suppose from the goepellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you to go'spell?
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave? Shakspere.

GO'SPELLER. n. f. [from go'spel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These go'spellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Rever.

GO'SSAMER. n. f. [gossypium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of autumn. Hanmer.

A lover may befriend the gossamour,
That idles in the wanton summer air,
And yet not tall, so light is vanity. Shakspere.

Four nimble gnats the hories were,
Their haunches of gossamer. Drayton's Nymphid.
The filmy gossamer now flits no more,
Nor halcyons balk on their sunny thore. Dryden's Virgil.

GOS SIP. n. f. [from gob and ryb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gauds with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakspere.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tipling companion
And sometimes lunk l in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakspere.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.

I is sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

TO GO'SSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]

a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat-man.

GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher.

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and ninepins. Beaumont and Fletcher.

Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gords and Fulham holds. Shakspere.

GORE. n. f. [gone, Saxon; gôr, Welsh, famous matter.]

1. Blood effused from the body.

A grievous wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gore blood thick,

That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Spenser.

Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Rn.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.

The bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die, Rolling in dust and gore. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood. Denham.

TO GORE. v. a. [geberian, Saxon.]

1. To stab; to pierce.

Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. Shakspere's Richard II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tulks the forest boar
Commision takes his brother swine to gore. Tate's Juvenal.

For arms his men long pikes and jav'lins bore,
And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore. Dryden.

2. To pierce with a horn.

Some toils'd, some gor'd, some trampling down
he kill'd. Dryden.

He idly butting, seigns
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomson.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver. Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is!
my gorge rises at it. Shakspere's Hamlet.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakspere's Othello.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Not in use.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spew'd up his gorge, that all did him detest. Spenser.

TO GORGE. v. n. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Being with his presence glutted gorge'd and full. Shakspere.

He that makes his generation messes,
To gorge his appetite. Shakspere's King Lear.

Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite. Dryden.

I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonfence or obsequity.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addison's Cato.

The giant, gor'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den. Addison.

2. To swallow; as, the fish has gorged the hook.

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.
Go to a god's feast and gaude with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

Shakespeare.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often hath she gossiped by my side.
The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege.
He gives himself up to an idle gossiping conversation.

Shakespeare.

Locke.

Locke.

Locke.

Locke.

Locke.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Nor met with fortune, other than at feast,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
GOSSIPRY n. f. [gossipy, from gossip.]
Gossipy or compaterity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent.

Davies.

- GOSSING. n. f. [rubia] An herb.

Ainsworth.

- GOT. The preterit of get.

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aulus got off.
If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Loved and esteemed.
These regions and this realm my wars have got;

Dryden.

This mournful empire is the loser's lot.
When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and asy back again, there they were presently in the dark.

Howard.

- GOT. The part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.

Knock.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the point of submission to your will is got, will most times do.

Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world?

Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Thou wert from Atna's burning central town,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder borne.

Pope.

- GO'TTEN. The part. pass. of get.

Wildom cannot be gotten for gold.
Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it.

Gove just in the hand, is out of despair.

T. J. R.

- TO GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French;
gubernu, Latin]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a muldly in a vital part is more incurable than in an external.

Spe from L. land.

Slaver to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men.

H. J. R.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present a civil war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are govern all things in times of peace.

D. J. R.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions.

Atterbury.

of man brings upon those souls she seizes on.

More against Atheism.

- GOVERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement,
French]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement, or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many.

Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself:
the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute.

Locke.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordained.

Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no division rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.

Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Locke.

Where any one person or body of men takes into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.

S. J. R.

3. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings.

H. J. R.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.

Pope.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lord, to mend your fault;

Though sometimes it shows greatness, courtly
blood,

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain.

Shakespeare.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequi-ousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.

Shakespeare.

6. Management of the limbs or body.
Obsolete.

Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them warded all with wary government.

Spenser.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

- GOVERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governor of the world by providence, all are partakers.

H. J. R.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governor of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise.

B. J. R.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations.

Psalm.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon a potent ground as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and run my soul in jeopardy, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a great force in this persuasion.

South.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governor,
Remains the censure of this hellish villain.

Shakespeare.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eltam, will I, where the young king is,
Being ord'nd in his special government;
And for his safety there I'll best devote.

Shakespeare.

The great work of a governor is to fix the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom.

Locke.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governors and counsellors.

Locke.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold all the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are turned about with a very small helm, which rever the governor lieth.

Locke.

To dignify with a degree in the university.

John Trigonwel, graduated a doctor and dubbed a knight, did good service. Carew

Concerning columns and their adjuncts, architects make such a noise, as if the terms of architecture, flizes, and cornices, were enough to graduate a matter of this art. Watson

To mark with degrees.

The places were marked where the spirits stood at the severest cold and greatest heat, and according to these observations he graduates his thermometer. Darham

To raise to a higher place in the scale of metals; a chymical term.

The tincture was capable to transmute or graduate as much silver as equalled in weight that gold. Boyle

To heighten; to improve.

Not only vitriol is a cause of blackness, but the salts of natural bodies; and dyes advance and graduate their colours with salts. Brown

GRADUATE. n. f. [graduatus, French; from gradus, Latin.] A man dignified with an academical degree.

Of graduates I dislike the learned rout,
And chuse a female doctor for the gout. Bramston

GRADUATION. n. f. [graduation, French; from graduate.]

Regular progression by succession of degrees.

The graduation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole. Grew

Improvement; exaltation of qualities.

Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oil of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall. Brown

The act of conferring academical degrees.

GRAFF. n. f. A ditch; a moat. See GRAVE.

Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep. Chambers

GRAFF. n. f. [greffe, French.] A small branch inserted into the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cion.

God gave unto man all kinds of seeds and graffs of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels. Raleigh

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graff maketh a great fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves. Bacon

'Tis usual now an inmate graff to see
With insolence invade a foreign tree. Dryden

If you cover the top with clay and horse-dung, in the same manner as you do a graff, it will help to heel the looser. Mortimer

Now the cleft mind inserted graffs receives,
And yields an offspring more than nature gives. Pope

To GRAFF. v. a. [greffer, French.]

1. To insert a cion or branch of one tree into the stock of another.

His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;
I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,
And graff you on to bear. Dryden's Don Sebastian
With his pruning hook disjoin
Unbearing branches from their head,
And graff more happy in their stead. Dryden

2. To propagate by insertion or inoculation.

Now let me graff my pears, and prune the vine. Dryden

3. To insert into a place or body to which it did not originally belong.

And they also, if they hide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in; for God is able to graff them in again. Romans

These are th' Italian names which fate will join
With oars, and graff upon the Trojan line. Dryden's Æneid

4. To impregnate with an adscititious branch.

We've some old crab-trees here at home, that will not Be graffed to your relish. Shakespeare

The noble idle doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graffs with ignoble plants. Shaks

5. To join one thing so as to receive support from another.

This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident graffed upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graff my love immortal on thy fame. Pope

To GRAFF. v. n. To practise infision.

In March is good graffing the skillful do know,
So long as the wind in the east do not blow:
From moon being changed, 'till past be the prime,
For graffing and cropping is very good time. Tusser

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graff not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graff but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon

GRAFTER. n. f. [from graff or graff.]

One who propagates fruit by graffing.
I am informed, by the trials of the most skillful graffers of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graff the same year in which the infision is made. Evelyn

GRAIL. n. f. [from grêle, French.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unwearied was,
And, lying down upon the sandy grails,
Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glass. Spenser

GRAIN. n. f. [graine, French; granum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not. Shakespeare

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shaks. Merch. of Venice

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shaks

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty. Mortimer

2. Corn.

As it chbs, the seedman
Upon the sune and oze feathers his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakespeare

Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,
Nor Ptochus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden

'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but oftener covered with weeds than grain. Collier on Fame

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Shakespeare

By intelligence
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare

5. The smallest weight, of which in physics twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a penny-weight; and so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

Unity is a precious diamond, whose grains as they double, twice double in their value. Holyday

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which arithet, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces, and pounds. Haller

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weighing only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abate of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water. Bacon

His brain
Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudib

6. Any thing proverbially small.

For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance. Wisdome

It is a sincerely pliable, ductile temper, that neglects not to make use of any grain of grace. Hammond

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and subsists by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain. South

7. GRAIN of Allowance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.

He, whose very best actions must be seen with grains of allowance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving. Addison

I would always give some grains of allowance to the sacred science of theology. Watts

8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakespeare

9. The body of the wood as modified by the fibres.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.

The tooth of a sea-horse, in the midst of the solid parts, contains a curled grain not to be found in ivory. Brown

Source of a continuation. In metaphors, and grain is fine, that they bear a fine polish.

11. Died or stained substance.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks;
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser.

Over his hel'd arms
A military vest of purple flow'd,
Livelier than melibman, or the grain

Of Liria, worn by kings and heroes old.
Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,
Flowing with majestick train. Milton.

The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail, Sky-tintur'd grain. Milton's Par. Lf.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres.

Your minds, preoccupied with what You rather must do than with what you should do,

Made you against the grain to voice him consul.
Shakespeare

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I see to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras.

Old clients weary'd out with fruitless care,
Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;
Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy to us for supper, and provide a fire. Dryden.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being weakable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in candling dunce, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of cutting substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the pro-tuberances; and therefore polish is no otherwise than by breaking its roughness, to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and jaggings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton.

GRAINED, adj. [from grain.] Rough;
made less smooth.

Though now this grained face of mine he hid
In sap consuming winter's dazzled snow,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaksp.

GRAINS, n. f. [without a singular.] The husks of malt exhausted in brewing.

Give them graine their fill,
Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.

GRAINS of Paradise, n. f. [cardamomum, Latin.] An Indian spice.

GRAINY, adj. [from grain.]

1. Full of corn.

2. Full of grains or kernels.

GRAME'RY, interj. [contracted from grant me mercy.] An obsolete expression of surprise.

Grame'ry, fir, said he; but mote I weat
What strange adventure do ye now pursue? Spenser.

Grame'ry, lovely Lucius, what 's the news?
Shakespeare.

GRAMINEOUS, adj. [gramineus, Latin.] Grassy. Gramineous plants are such as have a long leaf without a footstalk.

GRAMINIVOROUS, adj. [gramen and voro,
Latin.] Grazeating; living upon grass.

The ancients were verfed chiefly in the dissection of brutes, among which the graminivorous kind have a party-coloured choroides.

Sharp's Surgery.

GRAMMAR, n. f. [grammar, French;
grammatica, Latin; γράμματις, Greek.]

1. The science of speaking correctly; the art which teaches the relations of words to each other.

To be accurate in the grammar and idioms of the tongue, and likewise a rhetorician to make all their places serve his eloquence. Fell.

We make a countryman dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Men speaking language, according to the grammar rules of that language, do yet speak improperly of things. Locke.

2. Propriety or justness of speech; speech according to grammar.

Varium & mutabile semper feminis is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar. Dryden.

3. The book that treats of the various relations of words to one another.

GRAMMAR School, n. f. A school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught.

Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school. Shaksp.

The ordinary way of learning Latin in a grammar school I cannot encourage. Locke.

GRAMMARIAN, n. f. [grammairien, Fr.
from grammar.] One who teaches grammar; a philologist.

Many disputes the ambiguous nature of letters hath created among the grammarians. Hobbs.

They who have called him the torture of grammarians, might also have called him the plague of translators. Dryden.

GRAMMATICAL, adj. [grammatical, Fr.
grammaticus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to grammar.

The beauty of virtue still being set before their eyes, and that taught them with far more diligent care than grammatical rules. Sidney.

I shall take the number of consonants, not from the grammatical alphabets of any language, but from the diversity of sounds framed by single articulations with appulse. Hobbs.

2. Taught by grammar.

They seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless born with a poetical genius.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

GRAMMATICALLY, adv. [from grammatical.]
According to the rules or science of grammar.

When a sentence is distinguished into the nouns,
the verbs, pronouns, adverbs, and other particles of speech which compose it, then it is said to be analysed grammatically. Harris.

As grammar teacheth us to speak properly, so it is the part of rhetoric to instruct how to do it elegantly, by adding beauty to that language that before was naked and grammatically true. Baker.

GRAMMATICASTER, n. f. [Latin.]
A mean verbal pedant; a low grammarian.

I have not vexed language with the doubts, the remarks, and eternal triflings of the French gram-maticaster. Rymer.

GRAMPLE, n. f. A crabfish. Ainsworth.

GRAMPUS, n. f. A large fish of the cetaceous kind.

GRANARY, n. f. [granarium, Latin.] A storehouse for thrashed corn.

Ants by their labour and industry, contrive that corn will keep, as dry in their nests as in our granaries. Addison.

The naked nations cloaths,
And be the exulting granary of a world.

Thomson's Spring.

GRANATE, n. f. [from granum, Latin.]
A kind of marble so called, because it is marked with small variegations like grains. Otherwise GRANITE.

GRAND, adj. [grand, French; grandis,
Latin.]

1. Great; illustrious; high in power or dignity.

God had planted, that is, made to grow the trees of life and knowledge, plants only proper and becoming the paradise and garden of so a Lord. Keble's Hymns.

2. Great; splendid; magnificent.

A voice has flown
To re-entame a grand design, Young.

3. Principal; chief.

What cause
Mov'd our grand parents in that happy state,
Favour'd of heav'n so highly, to fall off
From their Creator. Milton.

mother.

I meeting him, will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grand law and as chaste
As may be in the world. Shakespeare.

We have our forefathers and great grand-am all before us, as they were in Chaucer's days. Dryden.

Thy tyrants heart belies thy angel face;
Too well thou show'st thy pedigree from stone;
Thy grandame's was the first by Pyrrus thrown. Dryden.

2. An old withered woman.

The women
Cry'd, one and all, the suppliant should have
And to the grandame hag adjug'd the knight. Dryden.

GRANDDAUGHTER, n. f. [grand and daughter.] The daughter of a son or daughter.

GRANDCHILD, n. f. [grand and child.]
The son or daughter of my son or daughter; one in the second degree of descent.

Augustus Cæsar, out of indignation against his daughters and Agrippa his grandchild, would lay that they were not his seed, but impudences broken from him. Bacon.

These hymns may work on future wits and to may great grandchildren of thy praises grow. Donne.

He hoped his majesty did believe, that he would never make the least scruple to obey the grandchild of king James. Clarendon.

Fair daughter, and thou son and grandchild both! Milton.

He 'scaping, with his gods and reliques fled,
And towards the shore his little grandchild led. Denham.

GRANDIER, n. f. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.] A man of great rank, power,
or dignity.

They had some sharper and some milder dis-sentences, which might easily happen in such an interview of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they swayed. Wotton.

When a prince or grandee manifests a liking to such a thing, men generally set about to make themselves considerable for such things. South.

Some parts of the Spanish monarchy are rather for ornament than strength: they furnish out viceroys for the grandees, and posts of honour for the noble families. Addison.

GRAND VITRE. n. f. [from grand vitre, Lat.] Great age; length of life. Di.
GRAND VITRE. adj. [from grand vitre, Lat.] Long-lived; of great age. Di.

 Elevation of sentiment, language or action.

GRANDFATHER. n. f. [from grand and father, Lat.] The father of my father or mother; the next above my father or mother in the scale of ascent.

One was saying that his great grandfather and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, said he, where did you die? He answered, where but in their beds? He, answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed. Bacon.

Our grandchildren will see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereat they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great. Swift.

GRANDINOUS. adj. [from grando, Lat.] Full of hail; consisting of hail. Di.

GRANDITY. n. f. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and brevity. Camden's Remains.

GRANDMOTHER. n. f. [from grand and mother, Lat.] The mother of my father or mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice. Timothy.

GRANDSIRE. n. f. [from grand and sire, Lat.] Grandfather.

Think't thou that I will leave my kingly throne.

Wherein my grandsire and my father sat? Shakspeare.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame gave, from two conquer'd parts of th' world their name. Denham.

The wroaths his grandsire knew to reap By native toil and military sweat. Prior.

Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man whose blood is warm within, So like a grandfire cut in alabaster? Shakspeare.

Above the portal, carved in cedar wood, Plac'd in their ranks, their godlike grandfathers stood. Dryden.

So mimic ancient wits at best, As apes our grandfathers in their doublets dress. Pope.

GRANDSON. n. f. [from grand and son, Lat.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store, Give much to you, and to his grandson more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much conversed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes. Swift.

RANGE. n. f. [from grange, French.] A farm; generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: naming ever the wood, with it; the trees were all blasted, the wine died of the mould; the cattle of the mountain, and the sheep of the meadow, was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakspeare.

The loose unletter'd hinds, When for their teeming flocks and granges full In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate; and of this sort were their granges and priories. Ascham.

GRANITE. n. f. [from granit, French, from granum, Latin; because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moorstone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. Hill on Fossils.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, to h temple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [from granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without meditation. Brown.

Pomice affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Arbut.

GRANNAM. n. f. [from grandam, Lat.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Off my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. ay.

GRANT. v. a. [from garantir, Fr.] Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Minshew thinks, from gratuita, or rather from gratia or gratificatio.

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and to, in effect, they plainly grant that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

I take it for granted, that though the Greek word when we translate saints, be in itself as applicable to things as persons; yet in this article it signifies not holy things, but holy ones. Pearson.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree, The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire A moment elder than my rival's life?

Can chance of seeing first thy little prove? Dryden.

If he be otherwise indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition, that thou hast asked of him. 1 Samuel.

Then hath God also to the gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts.

Didst thou not kill this king? — I grant ye.

— Do'st grant me, hedgehog? then grant me too, Thou may'st be damn'd for that wicked deed. Shakspeare's Richard III.

He heard, and granted half his prayer; The rest the winds dispense'd. Pope.

GRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon. Counters juggle for a grant.

And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dryden.

3. In law.

A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cowell.

All the land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty. Spenser.

Not only the laws of this kingdom, but of other places, and the Roman laws, provide that the prince should not be deceived in his grants. Davenant.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hobbes.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE. adj. [from grant.] That may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ascham.

GRANTEE. n. f. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smooth the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abbey-lands. Swift.

GRANTOR. n. f. [from grant.] He by whom a grant is made.

A duplex querela, shall not be granted under pain of suspension of the grantor from the execution of his office. Ascham.

GRANULAR. adj. [from granule.] Small and compact; resembling a small grain or seed.

Small coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granular bodies, do make up that powder which is used for guns. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GRANULATE. v. n. [from granule, French, from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, insipulated by heat, granulates into sugar. Spratt.

1. To break into small masses or granules.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many bees, the gullet, before its entrance into the pylorus, to be much dilated, and thick set, as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel. Boys.

GRANULATION. n. f. [from granulation, Fr. from granule.]

1. The act of pouring melted matter into cold water, so as it may granulate or congeal into small grains; it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed. Quincy.

2. The act of shooting or breaking in small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulations of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula. Sharp's Surgery.

GRA'NULE. n. f. [from granum, Lat.] A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow. Boyle on Colours.

GRA'NULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Full of little grains.

GRAPE. n. f. [grappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Leviticus.

Anacreon, for thy sake
I of the grape no mention make;
Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,
Curfed plant, I lov'd thee well. Cowley.

Here are the vines in early flow'r deserv'd,
Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side. Pope

GRAPE Hyacinth, or GRAPE Flower. n. f. A flower.

GRA'PESTONE. n. f. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,
A fly, a grapestone, or a hair can kill. Prior.

GRA'PHICAL. adj. [γράφω.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical. Bacon's Natural History.

GRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from graphical.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Caesellus. Brown

GRA'PHOL. n. f. [graphin, French.] A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

To GRA'PPLE. v. n. [grabbelen, Dutch; krappeln, German.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to cicle. Milton.

Living virtue, all achievements pass,
Meets envy, still to grapple with at last. Waller.
Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings? South.

Anæus here and stern Alcides strive,
And both the grappling statues seem to live. Addison.

2. To contend in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare.
Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,
Two grappling Ætnas on the ocean meet,
And English fires with Belgian flames contend. Dryden.

To GRA'PPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Obsolete.

Grapple your minds to service of the navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakspeare's Henry v.

That business

Our Hippogines, vessels for the transporting of hories, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grappling hooks to Anacharis. Heylin.

GRA'PPLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose
Fresh from his fall, and never grapple join'd, Tumulted at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.

Or did his genius
Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword. Dryden.

2. Close fight.

In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

But Cymon loon his crooked grappler cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd. Dryden.

GRA'PPLEMENT. n. f. [from grapple.]

1. To rub or wear any thing by the attrition of a rough body.

Thereat the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate.
Spenser.

Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated.
To dusty nothing. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

If the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opticks.

2. To offend by any thing harsh or vexa-tious.

Thereat enraged, from he 'gan upstart,
Grinding his teeth, and grating his great heart.

They have been partial in the gospel, called and chosen out those softer and more gentle climates which would less grate and disturb them.
Deacy of Pity.

Just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word, and grating as it is,
Take it, for 'tis thy due. Dryden.

This habit of writing and discursing, wherein I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and am apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London. Swift.

3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.

The grating shock of wrathful iron arms.

On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh clander, that the lowest bottom shook Of Erubus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

TO GRATE. v. n.

1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend;
to offend, as by oppression or impor-
tunity.

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should feel this lawless bloody look
Of foug'd rebellion with a seal divine? Shaksp.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grates. Shakspere.

Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be so tenderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Estrange.
This grated harder upon the hearts of men.

I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent. Lo. le.

2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.

We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife because the edge of it may sometimes grate.
Hooker.

GRATEFUL. adj. [gratus, Latin.]

1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.

A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays. Milton.

The sound of glory ringing in our ears. Herbert.

2. Quality of being acceptable; pleasantness.

GRATER. n. s. [gratoir, Fr. from grate.]

A kind of coarse file with which soft bodies are rubbed to powder.

Tender handed touch a nettle,
And it stings you for your pangs,
Grasp it like a man of nettle,
And it soft as silk remains.
So it is with common natures,
Treat them gently they rebel,
But be rough as nutmeg-graters,
And the rogues obey you well. A. Hill.

GRATIFICATION. n. s. [gratificatio,
Latin.]

1. The act of pleasing.

They are incapable of any design above the present gratification of their palates. South.

I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy. Shakespeare
 "The joy which subjects leave no doubt,
 When they are from a mourning grate,
 No less than if it were a feast."
 Do beg my thanks by alter state. Ben Jonson

GRATULATION. n. f. [gratulation, Latin.]
 Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

"They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts arms, and bowls embraced him." Hosier

The earth

Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milton

You, enjoyments, according to the standard of a christian there, require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance. South

GRATULATORY. adj. [from gratulate.]
 Congratulatory; expressing congratulation.

GRAVE, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græf, a grove or cave. Gibson's Camden

GRAVE. n. f. [græf, Saxon.] The place in the ground in which the dead are reposit.

Now it is the time of night;

That the graves, all gaping wide,

Every one lets forth his light,

In the church-way paths to glide. Shakespeare

Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton

To walk upon the graves of our dead matters,

Is our own security. Denham's Sophy

A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs; there solemnly to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to thank God for their pious examples, for their holy lives and their happy deaths. Nelson

GRAVE-CLOTHES. n. f. [grave and clothes.] The dress of the dead.

But of such subtle substance and unbind,

That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths

Were unbound. Spenser

1. Solemn; serious; sober; not gay; not light or trifling.

To a more mature,

A glass that last'd them; and to the grave,

A child that guided dotards. Shakespeare's Cymbeline

We should have the desire

Your good advice, which still hath been both grave

And prosperous in this day's council. Shakespeare

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed or massives, or elegance and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty. Mor

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity. Dryden

Youth on silent wings is flown;

Graver years come rolling on. Prior

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;

And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope

Folly-painting humour, grave himself,

Calls laughter forth. Thomson

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among christian philosophers. Law

Skilful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chronicles

To GRAVITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursued,

That matter is, with active force endued, That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert, And to each other gravitate, assert. Blackmore
That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body multi-gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to the terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley

When the loose mountain trembles from on high, Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope

GRAVITY. n. f. [gravis, Latin; gravité, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shown to be unobscurable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding flow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opticks

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No birds of prey are gregarious. Ray

GRE'GAL. adj. [gremium, Latin.] Pertaining to the lap. Di.

GRE'NADE. n. f. [from pomum granatum, Latin.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fusée fastened to the touchhole; as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near.

 Harris

GRE'NADIER. n. f. [grenadier, French, from grenade.] A tall footsoldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment: such men being employed to throw grenades.

Peace allays the grenadier's war. Gay's Pastoral

GRE'NADO. n. f. See GRE'NADE.

Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,
Not all those mouth grenados can suffice. Cleland

You may as well try to quench a flaming gre- nado with a shell of fair water as hope to succeed.

Watts

GRE'UT. n. f. A kind of fossil body.

A sort of tin ore, with its greet; that is, a congeries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the hiness of bay salt, and of a brown shining colour immersed therein. Grew's Museum.

GRI

GREW. The preterit of grow.
The pleasing task he fails not to renew;
Soft and more soft at ev'ry touch it grew.
Dryden.

GREY. adj. [gris, French.] More properly written gray.] See GRAY.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I spai'd at suit of his grey beard. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Our green youth copies what grey sinners act,
When venerable age commends the fact. Dryden.

GREYHOUND. n. f. [grîzhund, Saxon.]
A tall fleet dog that chafes in fight.

First may a trusty greyhound transform himself into a tyger. Sidney.
So, on the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A halt'ned hare from greedy greyhounds go.
Sidney.

Th' impatient greyhound, slipt from far,
Bounds o'er the globe to catch the fearful hare.
Dryden.

GRICE. n. f.
1. A little pig. Gouldman.
2. A step or greene.

No, not a grice;
This a step to love. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

TO GRIDE. v. n. [gridare, Italian.] To cut; to make way by cutting. A word elegant, but not in use.

His poignant spear he thrust with puissant sway,
That through his thigh the mortal steel did gride.
Spenser.

So fore
The griding sword, with discontinuous wound, Pais'd through him! Milton's Par. Lost.
GRIDELIN. n. f. A colour mixed of white and red.

The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence fatten, how'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin.
Dryden's Fables.

GRIDIRON. n. f. [grid, Islandick, a grate, and iron.] A portable grate on which meat is laid to be broiled upon the fire.

He had added two bars to the gridiron. Spenser.
GRIEF. n. f. {from grieve; griff, Welsh, probably from the English.}

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.
Shakspeare.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison.

2. Grievance; harm. [grief, French.]
Not in use.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this face of mine as far
As who gods fight. Shakspeare.

The king hath sent to know
The nature of your griefs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility? Shakspeare's Henry IV.

3. Pain; diseste. Obsolete.

GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]
1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances,
but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

GRI

TO GRIEVE. v. a. [grever, French; griever, Flemish; gravis, Latin.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.
For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Luke.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalms.

Is repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen.
Grieved at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breeches. Rowe.

2. To make sorrowful.
When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembreth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will. Perkins.

TO GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief: perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this. Shakspeare.
How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold
The end of all thy offspring end to sad. Milton.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden.

GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

GRIEVOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from To grieve.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.
To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth,
all affliction is naturally grievous. Hooker.

Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh
the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die.
Proverbs.

2. Such as causes sorrow.

To own a great but grievous truth, though they quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Watts.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.
He durst not disobey, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to. Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a grievous fault,
And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it. Shakspeare.
Crying sins I call those, which are so heinous,
and in their kind so grievous, that they hasten God's judgments, and call down for speedy vengeance upon the sinner. Perkins.

5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.

He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.
Shakspeare.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]

1. Painfully; with pain.
Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm
blood,
Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously. Spenser.

2. With discontent; with ill will.
Grattus perceiving how grievously the matter was taken, with the danger he was in, began to doubt. Kneller.

3. Calamitously; miserably.
I see how a number of souls are, for want of right information, oftentimes grievously vexed.
Hooker.

4. Vexatiously; to a great degree of uneasiness.

Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt. Ray on the Creation.

GRI

GRIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [from grievous.]
Sorrow; pain; calamity.

They fled from the sword, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war. Isaiah.

GRIFFIN. n. f. [This should rather be GRIFFON.]

written griffon, or gryphon;
griff, griff; but it is generally written griffin.] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among those winged creatures,
the griffin is the most ancient. Pluchier.

Aristeus, a poet of Proconetus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold. Brown.

GRIG. n. f. [kricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.

2. A small eel.

3. A merry creature. [Supposed from Greek; graculus fescivus, Latin.]

Haid is her heart as flint or stone,
She laughs to see me pale;
And merry as a grig is grown,
And brisk as bottle-ale. Swift.

TO GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.]
To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing
broiled on the gridiron.

TO GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass;
to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man,
for to tease him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,
We're grilled all at Temple-bar. Hudibras.

GRIM. adj. [grîmma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terror;
horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look to grim.
Spenser.

Grim Saturn yet remains,
Bound in those gloomy caves with adamantine chains. Dryden.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,

Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage?
Milton.

Expect to turn the sway
Of battle, open when and where to close
The ridges of grim war. Milton's Par. Lost.

He that dares to die,
May laugh at the grim face of law, and scorn
The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow. Drom.

Their wrathly hosts would darken all our plans,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim. Addison.

2. Ugly; ill looking.

Stuit stood up to him
Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grim and grim,

This better check gave. Chapman.
Grim visage'd war had smooch'd his wrinkl'd front. Shakspeare.

Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shakspeare.

GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.

He had not spared to shew his piques
Against th' haranguer's politicks,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces. Malibras.
The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very early rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.
The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange.
The French nation is addicted to grimace.
Sp. Sator.

2. Air of affectation.

Vice in a vizard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.
GRIMALKIN. n. f. [gris, French, gray, and malin, or little Moll. Gray little woman.] The name of an old cat.
Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe: with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Philips.

GRIME. n. f. [from grim.] Dirt deeply infiltrated; sullyng blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing to clean kept; for why? She sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it. Shakspeare.

Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Woodward.

To GRIME. v. a. [from the noun.] To dirt, to sully deeply.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, ell' all my hair in knots. Shakspeare.

GRIMLY. adv. [from grim.]

1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.

We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. Shakspeare.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies.
Addison's Cato.

2. Sourly; sullenly.

The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look
grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Shakspeare.
GRIMNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror;
frightfulness of visage.

To GRIN. v. n. [grinman, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.
Death's death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st.
Shakspeare.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away.
Shakspeare.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and out-cries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth.
Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears:
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws seem grimly grin. Dryden.
They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grinned their teeth, and cast a helpless view.
Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter, and to frantic mirth.
Prior.

Fools grin on fools, and stoiclike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court.
Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish

I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and showing them.

He laughs at him, in 's face too.
—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryden.
The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin. Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and arguments; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace. Watts on the Mind.

What looks are those saluting with a grin?
One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN. n. f. [grin, grine, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a bride that hasteth to his gryn
Not knowing the peril. Chaucer.
The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Job.

To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part.
pass. ground. [grundan, grunden, ground, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Matthew.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakspeare.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley's Sermons.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy sile is dull; what it, for shame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it
'Twenty to one too sharp do find it. Herbert.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds.
Dryden's Fables.

3. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And countenance stern, upstanding, 'gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Spenser.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon's Natural History.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Brown's Advice to Virgins.

Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind
the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addison.

5. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for griding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker, and my cries increase'd.
Dryden.

To GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton's Agonistes.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.
Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws.
Rousseau.

GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

2. The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone.
Sanhya.

Now exhort
Thy hands to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Philips.

3. [grind-tooth.] The back teeth,
the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp as the foreteeth; broad, as the back teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both.
Bacon's Natural History.

He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey.
Sandys.

The jaw teeth or grinders in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments. Ross.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore heu-minating animals, which do not ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbutnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.
One, who at the sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd.
Dryden.

Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

GRINDSTONE. } n. f. [from grind and GRINDSTONE. } stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones. Ben. Jonson.
Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coolters, and to whet their natural faculties.

Hammond on Fundamentals.
Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone
'till bright. Moxon.

GRINNER. n. f. [from grin.] He that grins.

The frightful grinner,
Be the winter. Addison's Spectator.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP. n. f. A small ditch. Ainsworth.

To GRIPE. v. a. [gripan, Gothick; gripan, Saxon; grijpen, Dutch; grippa, Scottish.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes careful action
With wrinkl'd brows. Shakspeare's King John.

2. To hold hard.
He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold.
Dryden's Rinaldo.

GRI

[gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.

You took occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the gen'ral sway into your hands.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

To close; to clutch.

Unlucky Welfed! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster.
Pope

To pinch; to press; to squeeze.

A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey.
Spenser.

And first the dame came rushing through the
wood;

And next the famish'd hounds that sought their
food,

And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood.
Dryden's Fables.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent.
Dryden

TO GRIPPE. v. n.

1. To feel the colick; to have the belly-ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those diseases which are a feast to others.
Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of tickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us.
Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.

It is mean revenue, 'by being' scattered, in the work of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by griping, made them less, and grew stark beggars.
Fell.

GRIPPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high,
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatening with greedy gripe to do him dy.
Spenser.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour.
Shakespeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd.
Dryden's Æneid.

Squeeze; pressure.

Fix'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;

'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe.
Dryden.

Oppression; crushing power.
I take my cause
Out of the gripes, of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Amiction; pinching distress.

Adam, at the news
Of that struck with chilling gripe of sorrow flood,
But all his sense's bound!

Can't thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
And for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of starving poverty?
Gray.

In the plural.] Bellyache; colick.

In the jaundice the colic is wanting; and the organ have a great swarms and gripes with wind.

In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,
Griper steain'd.
Milton's Paradise Reg.

GRIS. n. f. [See GREEC, as it should be written.] A step, or scale of steps.

Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.
Shakespeare's Othello.

GRISKIN. n. f. [griffin, roast meat,
Irish.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled.

GRISLY. adj. [grisly, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.
Spenser.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see.
Spenser.

My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;

Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon.
Milton.

For that damn'd magician, let him be gut
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron.
Milton.

The beautiful form of light,
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly fight.
Dryden's Fables.

In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors reigning in thy race.
Dryden.

Thus the grise's spectre spoke again.
Close by each other laid, they pact'd the
ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound.
Dryden.

So rushes on his foe the grisly bear.
Adams.

GRIST. n. f. [grist, Saxon.]

1. Corn be to ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water.
Tyler's Husbandry.

A mighty trade this husky miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his let did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall.
Miller of Tromp.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail if matter brings no grist.
Swift.

3- GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all mathematical causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRISTLE. n. f. [gristle, Saxon.]

A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles.
Bacon's Natural History.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the œsophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a slimy substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annulary

GRI

gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Key on the Creation

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes.
Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one entire bone without these gristly junctures.
More.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like women's fans.
Ray.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe.
Grew.

Each pipe distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To church life aerial pasture brings.
Blackmore.

GRIT. n. f. [grizza, græoz, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles.

Slesian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap.
Grew.

The sturdy pear tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with tough root
Pierce the obstructing grit and retentive marl.
Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder;
the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or diffused by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass.

One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt water, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards dissolved by water. This is the putrel patellina of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysolite of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferruginous black glittering grit, is the blue shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.
Hill on Fossil.

GRITINESS. n. f. [from grit.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In full's-mouth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grit.
Mortimer.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof.
Newton.

GRITLIN. n. f. [more properly griddelin,
see CRIDELIN.]

The Bergader, which is a grizlin or pale red,
of all others, is best to open in our climate.
Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from griz, gray;
grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling ev'! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face?
Shakespeare.

GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.

GRO

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head.

Shakspeare.

His beard was grizzled: no.

—It was as I have seen it in his life.

Shakspeare.

His hair just grizzled,

As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth their asses ears to hide. Dryd.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, Fr.]
Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turned to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN. v. n. [gnan, Saxon; gromen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir

Of these fair edifices, for my wait,

Have I heard groan and drop. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Men groan from out of the city, and the foul of the wounded crieth out. Joh.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit.

Wisdom.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,

Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pop.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.

Alas, poor country,

Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the

air,

Are made, not mark'd! Shakspeare's Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;

And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive.

Dryden.

Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play.

Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. King Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad;
agonizing. Not used.

Adown he keft it with so puissant wrest,

That back again it did aloft rebound,

And gave against his mother earth a groanful found. Spenser.

GROAT. n. f. [groot, Dut. grosso, Ital.]

1. A piece valued at four pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont

To call them woollen vassals, things created

To buy and sell with groats. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

I dare lay a groat,

A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.

Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Answorth.

GROCER. n. f. [This should be written groffer, from grofs, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a sig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plums and spices for gain. Watts's Logic.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove.

Garth.

GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocer's ware, such as tea, sugar, raisins, spice.

His troops being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GRO'GRAM. } n. f. [gros, grain, Fr.]

GRO'GRAM. } grossgranus, low Latin.

GRO'GRAM. } Answorth. Stuff woven with a large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,

Your only wearing is your grogram. Donne.

Natolia affords great store of chameleons, and grograms. Sandys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's hair nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grogram, or the like. Brown.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in grogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade.

Addison.

Plus goodly would no longer down;

'Twas madam in her grogram gown. Swift.

GROIN. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]

The part next the thigh.

Antiplex, a sonne of Priam, threw

His lance at Ajax through the preefts, which went by him, and flew,

On Leucus, wife Ulysses' friend: His groine it smote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,

And through the border of his buckler drives;

Pals'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly

wound

Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground.

Dryden.

GRO'WELL. n. f. [libospermum, Lat.]

Gromill or graymill. A plant. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [grom, Dutch.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called to a groom, that forth him led

Into a goodly lodge. Spenser.

From Egypt's kings ambassadors they come;

Them many a squire attends, and many a groom.

Fairfax.

Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom

Which brings a taper to the outward room.

Donne.

In the time of Edward vi. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacham.

Would't thou be touch'd

By the perfuming hands of saucy grooms? Dryd.

Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep

Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryden.

2. A young man.

I presume for to intreat this groom,

And silly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax.

3. A man newly married

By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are drest'd;

All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast.

Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other;

and in those holes are threads grooved inwards,

which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.

Of the box every joint was well grooved. Swift.

GRO

To GROPE. v. n. [gnapan, Saxon.]

To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark

Grop'd, I to find out them. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

We grobe for the wall like the blind, and we grobe as if we had no eyes. Isiah.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;

And grobe at noon, as if involv'd with night.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake, L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grobe after knowledge as

St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He head'd us in our course,

And with his outstretch'd arms around him grop'd

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,

I grobe and guess no more, but see my way.

Arbutnot.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grobe mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might con-plain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grobe then out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by her

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant

The bottom of the pan to grobe. Steele.

GRO'PER. n. f. [from grobe.] One that searches in the dark.

GROSS. adj. [gros, French; gross, Ital.]

crassus, Latin.]

air,

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakspeare.

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes. Locke.

2. Shameful; unseemly; enormous.

He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wife and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants of will under them. Hud.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of fundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be

sin. Hud.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dulness. Locke.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross

You love my son: invention is, at hand,

Against the proclamation of thy passion,

To say thou do'st not. Shakspeare.

Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakspeare.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more low

Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love

Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself,

above all, in its Author, that, without the gross

sensuality, we cannot but admire it? Spence.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be benevolent. Smollett.

But she dares never boast the present hour,

So gross the cheat, it is beyond her power. Young.

4. Inclegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the rosy bloom

Of beauty blanching, gives the gloomy hue,

And features gross. Thomson's Summer.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated;

not pure.

GRO

It is manifest that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the grosser, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium, and the object in the finer.

Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,

The grosser feeds the purer; earth the sea, Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad; Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden.

Or suck the mists in grosser air below, Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull. If she doth then the subtle sense excel, How gross are they that drown her in her blood? Davies.

And in clear dream and solemn vision, Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear. Milton.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicuity and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; not delicate. Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Wotton.

8. Thick; fat; bulky. His stature was of just height and all proportionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meagre. Fel.

GROSS. n. f. [from the adjective.] 1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd that with disorder'd haste The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run; Or, if with caution laisur'dly we past, Then numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freeholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of public blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make feasible your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular. The general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins. Duty of Man.

Remember, son, You are a general; other wars require you; Forsee the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shakspeare.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross Of full three thousand ducats. Shakspeare.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [gross, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSSLY. adv. [from gross.]

GRO

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together, As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose; Working so grossly in a natural cause, That admiration did not weep at them. Shakspeare.

And thine eyes See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour, That in their kind they speak it. Shakspeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it? —Speak not so grossly. Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry to happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton's Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swiss.

GROSSNESS. n. f. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance. Whole grossness little characters sum up. Shakspeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so, That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakspeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon.

Then all this earthy grossness quit; Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit, Triumphant over death. Milton.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, makes known Th' opposing body's grossness, not it's own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unweildy corpulence.

Wild men, that be over-fat and stilly, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guilefulness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shakspeare.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Ital.]

A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot, Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful see the Egyptian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; grottesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides With thickest overgrown, grotesque and wild, Access deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting which is out of nature; for a face is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

GRO

An hideous figure of their foes they drew, Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true, And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors, Grotesco roofs and grotesco floors. Pope.

GROTTO. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless clu's to the cool grotto's run, The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought The wood began to move: Within this three mile may you see it coming; I say, a moving grove. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales: Thrice happy isles! Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love, Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can force passions vex his breast, Whilst every gale is peace, and every grove Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

TO GROVEL. v. n. [grusde, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel head passage wrought, And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem, Incas'd with all the honours of the world! It so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face, Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakspeare.

Oke mast and beech, and cornell fruit they éate, Groveling like swine on earth, in fowlest sort. Chapman.

Now they lie Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to re-join this part of excellence; not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim whatever he can express; His groveling sense will shew my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grund, Saxon; gronde, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action.

The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth, but under ground.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Exodus.

Man to till the ground None was, and from the earth a dewy mist Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.

- From the other hill
To their fix'd station all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gilding motions. Milton.
- A black bituminous gurge Boil'd up from under ground. Milton.
- And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.
2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.
I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremiah.
- There was a dew upon all the ground. Judges.
They tumm'd their wings, and soaring th' au-sublime, Milton.
- With clays despis'd the ground. Milton.
Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Fat on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æneid.
3. Land; country.
The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.
4. Region; territory.
On heavenly ground they stood, and from the shores
They view'd the vast immeasurable shifs. Milton.
With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Babel and Ashtaroth. Milton's Parad. Lost.
5. Estate; possession.
Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design it on thy neighbour's grounds:
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dry.
6. Land occupied.
The sea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Mil.
7. The floor or level of the place.
Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground?
2 Samuel.
Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground.
1 Samuel.
- A multitude sit on the ground.
Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake descends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown.
8. Dregs; lees; feces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.
Set by them cyder, verjuice, four drink, or grounds. Mortimer.
Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal.
Sharp's Surgery.
9. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterward painted.
We see the limner to begin with a rude draught and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours. Halswell.
When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion and void of different objects: they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden.
10. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.
O'er his head
A well-wrought heaven of silk and gold was spread,
Azure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright.
Cowley.
Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.
Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.
11. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

- Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant.
Shakspeare's Richard III.
12. First hint; first traces of an invention, that which gives occasion to the rest.
I though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love remain'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers
nigh. Dryden.
13. The first principles of knowledge.
The concords will easily be known, if the foreground, be thoroughly beaten in. Prof. to Acad.
Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.
The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it 'not irresistibly.
Hammond.
After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture.
Milton on Education.
14. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.
He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness,
and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sid.
The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.
In the solution of the Sabbathizer's objection,
my method shall be, to examine, in the first place,
the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.
Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.
Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures.
Clarendon.
Sound judgment is the ground of writing well.
Roscommon.
Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true.
Dryden.
It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.
If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.
Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettlewell.
Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.
The miraculous increase of the professors of christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.
15. The field or place of action.
Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And e'en with theirs this act thy death did bring;
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Dan.
16. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.
At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to ion ground. Sidney.
Heartleis they fought, and quitted soon their
ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd.
Dryden.
He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Rocourt. Dryden.

17. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.
Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spect.
Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment.
18. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.
Had'st thou Gray'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground into the house of York.
They never then had sprung. Shakspeare.
If they get ground and vantage of the king,
Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Att. Rich.
Whatever ground we may have gotten up on our enemies, we have gotten none upon our own;
the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph
so gloriously over the other. Ausbury.
19. State of progress or recession.
I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.
The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wears herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Dufigny.
20. The foil to set a thing off.
Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shall.
- TO GROUND. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To fix on the ground.
2. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.
Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.
The church of England walking in the good and old way of the orthodox primitive fathers groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's day, and of other christian holidays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment.
It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Bayly.
If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dry.
Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to single person than a multitude. Saunders.
3. To settle in first principles or rudiment of knowledge.
Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph.
- GROUND. The pret. and part. pass. c grind
How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground
And polish'd, looks a diamond. Hudibras.
- GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near
the ground.
GROUND-ASH. n. f. A sapling of ash take from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.
A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw
Dr. Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew.
Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to mal-very large fruit shoots, which they call groundelf. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GROUNDBAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it. Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Wat.

GROUNDFLOOR. n. f. [ground and floor.] The lower part of a house.

GROUNDEVY. n. f. [bedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof. Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GROUNDOAK. n. f. [ground and oak.] If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mortimer.

GROUNDPINE. n. f. [chamapitys, Latin.] A plant. The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road sides. Hill.

GROUNDPATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney-way, and the binding joist. Harris. In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the ground plates, breast summers, and beams. Mortimer.

GROUNDPLOT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed. Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney. A ground plot square five hives of bees contains; Emblems of industry and virtuous gains. Harte.
2. The ichnography of a building.

GROUNDS-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground. A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground rent of five pounds. Arbutnot on Coima. The site was neither granted him, nor giv'n; 'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heav'n. Harte.

GROUNDRoom. n. f. A room on the level with the ground. I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Taiter.

GROUNDEDELY. adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles. He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanv.

GROUNDELESS. adj. [from ground.] Void of reason; wanting ground. But when vain doubt and groundless fear Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior. We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury. The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may show how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Frechbolds.

GROUNDELESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason. Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.

GROUNDESENESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason. He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falshood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillotson.

GROUNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the low vulgar. Hammer. It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GROUNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. Not in use. A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other men's works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Ascham.

GROUNSEL. n. f. [grund and rile, the basis, Saxon, perhaps from sella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground. The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freer fall off. Moxon.

GROUNSEL. n. f. [senecio, Latin.] A plant.

GROUNDSWORK. n. f. [ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional. A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of stars. Dryden's Fables.
2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals. The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.
3. First principle; original reason. The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Spenser. The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; gropo, Italian.] A crowd; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together. In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, these are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufrancy. I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Adelphi. You should try your graving tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.

TO GROUP. v. a. [grouper, French.] To put into a crowd; to huddle together. The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

GROUSE. n. f. A kind of fowl; a heath-cock. The 'quires in scorn will fly the house For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.

GROUT. n. f. [gruz, Saxon. In Scotland they call it groats.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard. King Harclutute, 'midst Danes and Saxons flour, Carous'd in nut-brown ale, and dind on grout: Which dish its justice honour still retains, And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. King.
2. That which purges off. Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout; The rest, in cells apart, the liquid nectar flout. Dryden.
3. A kind of wild apple. [agriomelum, Latin.]

TO GROW. v. n. pret. grew; part. pass. grown. [gropan, Sax. grozen, Dut.]

1. To vegetate; to have vegetable motion; to increase by vegetation. It is not the growing of fruit that nourisheth man; but it is thy word which preserveth them. Wisdom. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. Isaiah.
2. To be produced by vegetation. In this country groweth abundance of that wood, which since is brought into Europe to die red colours. Abbot. A bag, that groweth in the fields, at the first is hard like a tennis-ball, and white; and after growth of a mushroom-colour, and full of light dust. Bacon's Natural History. But say, where grows the tree? from hence how far? Milton. In colder regions men compose Poison with art; but here it grows. Waller. Those tow'rs of oak o'er fertile plains might grow, And visit mountains where they once did grow. Waller.
3. To shoot in any particular form. Children, like tender osters, take the bow, And as they first are fashion'd, always grow. Dryden's Juvenal.
4. To encrease in stature. I long with all my heart to see the prince; I hope he is much grown since last I saw him. Shakespeare's Richard III. The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and rear'd up; and it grew up together with him and with his children. Samuel.
5. To come to manhood from infancy: commonly followed by up. Now the prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition. Bacon's Advice to Villiers. The main thing to be considered in every action of a child, is how it will become him when he is bigger, and whither it will lead him when he is grown up. Locke. We are brought into the world children, ignorant and impotent; and we grow up in vanity and folly. Wake.
6. To issue, as plants from a soil, or as branches from the main trunk. They will seem not stuck unto him, but growing out of him. Dryden's Ann. Dedication.
7. To increase in bulk; to become greater, or more numerous. Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay: as for nails they grow continually. Bacon. Then their numbers swell, And grow upon us. Dryden.

S R

Divisions grew upon us, by neglect of practical duties: as every age degenerated from primitive piety, they advanced in nice enquiries.

Delay of Piety.

8. To improve; to make progress.

Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned. James.

4. To wish in secret. A low word.

'E'en in the most sincere advice he gave,
He had a grudging still to be a knave. Dryden.

5. To give or have any uneasy remains
I know not whether the word in this sense be not rather grugeons, or remains; grugeons being the part of corn that remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve.

My Dolabella,

Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever? Dryden.

GRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Old quarrel; inveterate malevolence; fullen malice.

Many countries about her were full of wars, which, for old grudges to Corinth, were thought still would conclude there. Sidney.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shakespeare

Let me go in to see the generals:
There is some grudge between 'em; 'tis not meet
They be alone. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Deep fester'd hate:
A grudge in both, time out of mind, begun,
And mutually bequeath'd from fire to sun. Tate's Juvenal.

2. Anger; ill-will.

The god of wit, to shew his grudge,
Clapt his ears upon the judge. Swift.

3. Unwillingness to be hurt.

Those to whom you have
With grudge prefer'd me. Ben Jonson.

4. Envy; odium; invidious censure.

5. Remorse of conscience. Ainsworth.

6. Some little commotion, or forerunner of a disease. Ainsworth.

GRUDGINGLY. adv. [from grudge.] Unwillingly; malignantly; reluctantly.
Like harpies they could scent a plenteous board;
Then to be sure they never fail'd their lord:
The rest was form, and bare attendance paid;
Then drank and eat, and grudgingly obey'd. Dryden.

GRUEL. n. f. [gruau, gruella, French.]

Food made by boiling oatmeal and water; any kind of mixture made by boiling ingredients in water.

Finger of birth-brand'd babe,
Ditch deliver'd by a drab;
Make the gruel thick and slab. Shakespeare.

Was ever Tartar fiercer or cruel
Upon the strength of water gruel? Prior.

Gruel made of grain, broths, malt drink not much hopped, posset-drinks, and in general whatever relaxeth. Arbutnot.

GRUFF. adj. [gruff, Dutch.] Sour of aspect; harsh of manners.

Around the fiend in hideous order, fat
Foul bawling infamy and bold debate,
Gruff discontent, through ignorance mis'd. Garth.

The appellation of honour was such an one the gruff, such an one the flocky. Addison.

GRUFFLY. adv. [from gruff.] Harshly; ruggedly; roughly.

The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,
All threat'd in arms, and gruffly look'd the god. Dryden.

GRUFFNESS. n. f. [from gruff.] Ruggedness of mien; harshness of look or voice.

GRUM. adj. [contracted from grumble.] Sour; surly; severe. A low word.

Nic looked sour and grum, and would not open his mouth. Arbutnot.

To GRUMBLE. v. n. [grommelen, grommen, Dutch.]

1. To murmur with discontent.

A bachel'groom,
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find. Shakespeare.

Thou grumb'st and rail'st every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Th' accus'd Philition stands on th' other side, Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride. Cowley.

Suitor, all but one, will depart grumbling, because they miss of what they think their due. South.

Providence has allotted man a competency: all beyond it is superfluous; and there will be grumbling without end, if we reckon that we want this, because we have it not. L'Estrange.
I'Avare, not using half his store,
Still grumbles that he has no more. Prior.

2. To growl; to gnarl.

The lion, though he sees the toils are set,
Yet, piach'd with raving hunger, scours away;
Hunts in the face of danger all the day;
At night, with fullen pleasure, grumbles o'er his prey. Dryden.

3. To make a hoarse rattle.
Thou grumbling thunder join thy voice. Motteux.

Like a storm
That gathers black upon the frowning sky,
And grumbles in the wind, Roset.

Vapour-stoul
Dash on the mountains brow, and shake the woods

That grumbling wave below. Thomson's Winter.

GRUMBLER. n. f. [from grumble.] One that grumbles; a murmurer; a discontented man.

The half-pence are good half pence, and I will stand by it: if I made them of silver, it would be the same thing to the grumbler. Swift.

GRUMBLING. n. f. [from grumble.] A murmuring through discontent; a grudge.

I have serv'd
Without or grudge or grumbings. Shakespeare.

GRUME. n. f. [grumeau, Fr. grumus, Latin.] A thick viscid consistence of a fluid: as the white of an egg, or clotted like cold blood. Quincy.

GRUMELY. adv. [from grum.] Sulkily; morosely.

GRUMOUS. adj. [from grume.] Thick; clotted.

The blood, when let, was black, grumous, the red part without a due consistence, the serum saline, and of a yellowish green. Arbutnot.

GRUMOUSNESS. n. f. [from grumous.] Thickness of a coagulated liquor.

The cause may be referred either to the coagulation of the serum, or grumousness of the blood. Wise's Surgery.

GRUNSEL. n. f. [More usually groundsel, unless Milton intended to preserve the Saxon grunb.] The groundsel; the lower part of the building.

Next came one
Who murr'd in earnest, when the captive ask Mann'd his brute image, heads and hands lopp'd off

In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,
Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers. Milton.

To GRUNT. } v. n. [grunio, Lat.]
To GRUNTLE. } To murmur like a hog.

And neigh, and baw, and grunt, and roar and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Shakespeare.

Lament, ye swine; in gruntings spend your grief;
For you, like me, have lost your sole relief. Gay.

Thy blinded boars may slumber undisturb'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chestnut shade. Tate.

The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round. Swift.

GRUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.

GUA

Swine's snouts, swine's bodies, took they, bristles, grunts. Chapman.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break.

From hence were heard
The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,
And heids of howling wolves. Dryden's Æn.

GRUNTER. n. f. [from grunt.]

1. He that grunts.

2. A kind of fish. [χρουντς.]

GRUNTLING. n. f. [from grunt.] A young hog.

TO GRUTCH. v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented. Not used.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,
Lest some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all.
But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
If 't chance to me, I must not grutch. Ben Jonson.

GRUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.

In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter t' any such. Hudibras.

GRY. n. f. [γρυ.] Any thing of little value; as, the paring of the nails. Did.

GUAIA'CUM. n. f. A physical wood.

Guaicum is attenuant and aperient. It is excellent in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaicum. Hill.

GUARANTEE. n. f. [garantir, French.] A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence. South.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

An oath is a promise made to God, and God is our superior, superior to kings. And he is also the guarantee and avenger of all breach of faith and injustice. Leffey.

TO GUARANTY. v. a. [garantir, French.] To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

TO GUARD. v. a. [garder, French; from our word ward, the w being changed by the French into g; as Galles for Wales.]

1. To watch by way of defence and security.

2. To protect; to defend.
Naked the graces guarded you from all Dangers abroad, and now your thunder shall. Walker.

Your pow'r you never use, but for defence,
To guard your own or others innocence. Dryden.
Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard the shore from an expected foe. Dryd.
The port of Genoa is very ill guarded against the storms. Addison on Italy.

3. To preserve by caution.
One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to. Addison's Spectator.

4. To provide against objections.

Homer has guarded every circumstance with as much caution as if he had been aware of the objection. Broom's on Odyssey.

5. To adorn with lifts, laces, or ornamental borders. Obsolete.

Give him a livery
More guarded than his fellows. Shakspeare.
See a fellow

In a long motley, guarded with yellow. Shakspeare.
TO GUARD. v. n. To be in a state of caution or defence.

There are cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.

To guard against such mistakes, it is necessary to acquaint ourselves a little with words. Watts.

GUARD. n. f. [garde, French; ward, Teutonic]

1. A man, or body of men, whose business is to watch by way of defence or prevention.

The guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard chamber. 1 Kings.

Up into heav'n, from paradise, in haste
Th' angelick guards ascended, mute, and sad,
For man. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They mis'd courts, guards, a gay and num'rous train,
Our judges like our laws were rude and plain. Cowley.

With lifted hands, and gazing eyes,
His guards behold him soaring through the skies. Dryden.

He must be trusted to his own conduct, since there cannot always be a guard upon him, except what you put into his own mind by good principles. Locke.

They usurping arbitrary power, had their guards and spies, after the practice of tyrants. Swift.

2. A state of caution; a state of vigilance.
The great alteration which he made in the state ecclesiastical, caused him to stand upon his guard at home. Davies.

Temerity puts a man off his guard. L'Estrange.
It is wisdom to keep ourselves upon a guard. L'Estrange.

Now he stood collected and prepar'd;
For malice and revenge had put him on his guard. Dryden.

Others are cooped in close by the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke.

Men are always upon their guard against an appearance of design. Smalridge.

A maid so tender, fair and happy,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom.
Of such a thing as thou. Shakspeare's Othello.

GUARDER. n. f. One who guards. Ains

GUARDIAN. n. f. [gardien, French, from guard.]

1. One that has the care of an orphan; one who is to supply the want of parents.
I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian. Shakspeare.

When perjur'd guardians, proud with impious gains,
Choak up the streets, too narrow for their trains! Dryden.

Hocus, with two other of the guardians, thought it their duty to take care of the interest of the three girls. Arbuthnot.

2. One to whom the care and preservation of any thing is committed.

GUD

I gave you all,

Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number. Shakspeare's King Lear.
It then becomes the common concern of all that have truth at heart, and more especially of those who are the appointed guardians of the christian faith, to be upon the watch against seducers. Waterland.

3. A repository or storehouse. Not used.
Where is Duncan's body?

—Carried to Colmekill,
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones. Shakspeare.

GUARDIAN of the Spiritualities. He to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see. He may be either guardian in law, or jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese within his province; or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbishop or vicar-general doth for the time depute. Cowell.

GUARDIAN. adj. Performing the office of a kind protector or superintendent.

My charming patroness protects me unseen, like my guardian angel; and thuns my gratitude like a fairy, who is bountiful by stealth, and conceals the giver when she bestows the gift. Dryden.

Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
The promis'd father of a future age. Pope.
Mean while Minerva, in her guardian care,
Shoots from the starry vaults through fields of air. Pope.

GUARDIANSHIP. n. f. [from guardian.] The office of a guardian.

The curate stretched his patent for the cure of souls, to a kind of tutelary guardian-ship over goods and chattels. L'Estrange.

This holds true, not only in losses and indignities offered to ourselves, but also in the case of trait, when they are offered to others who are committed to our care and guardian-ship. Kettledell.

Theseus is the first who established the popular state in Athens, assigning to himself the guardian-ship of the laws, and chief commands in war. Swift.

GUARDLESS. adj. [from guard.] Without defence.

So on the guardless herd, their keeper slain, Rushes a tyger in the Libyan plain. Walker.
A rich land, guardless and undefended, must needs have been a double incitement. South.

GUARDSHIP. n. f. [from guard.]

1. Care; protection.
How blest'd am I, by such a man led!
Under whose wife and careful guardian-ship
I now despise fatigue and hardship. Swift.

2. [guard and ship.] A king's ship to guard the coast.

GUAIA'VA. n. f. An American fruit.

GUA'VA. } The fruit, says Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that being very astringent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

GUBERNATION. n. f. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; superintendency; superiour direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts.

GUDGON. n. f. [goujon, French.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

The true, no turbets dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.
Pope.

1. A man easily cheated
This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.
2. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allure-ment: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.
But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shakespeare.
GUE'DON. n. f. [guerdon, gardon, Fr.]
A reward; a recompence, in a good and bad sense. Not in use.
But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,
By him who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misgiving her true knight to be. Spenser.
He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villainies.
Kneller.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And splits the thin-spun life. Milton.

To GUESS. v. a. [ghiffen, Dutch.]
1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.
Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.
Shakespeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possit them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should be not very often guess rightly of things to come,
where God pleaseth not to give impediment?
Ruleigh.

There issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs,
To be Taxallan enemies I guess. Dryden.
The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.
To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.
Stillingfleet.

2 GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident, to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.
Shakespeare.

His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet must confess
His art's like physick, but a happy guess. Dryd.
It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.
No man is blest by accident, or guess,
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUE'SSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjectu-rer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchet,

To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee three lawn sleeves, a mitre, and rochet, Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shakespeare.

GUEST. n. f. [gæst, girt, Saxon;
gwæst, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Luke.

—Methinks a father

Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest

That best becomes the table. Shakespeare.

—Tell my royal guest

I add to his commands my own request. Dryden.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O defaults, defaults! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting?
Sidney.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know

What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence

As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakespeare.

GUESTRITE. n. f. [from guest and rite.]

Offices due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear

A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear

In his black fleets that guestrite to the war. Chapman.

GUESTCHAMBER. n. f. [guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat
the passover with my disciples? Mark.

To GUGGLE. v. n. [gorgolaire, Italian.]

To found as water running with inter-missions out of a narrow mouthed vessel.

GUIDAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsworth.

GUIDANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead would persuade them.

Particular application must be left to christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

This to the young—but thy experience'd age

Wants not the guidance of a former age. Swett.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

To GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide
you into all truth. John.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours coffers. Way of Piety.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims,
when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up. Kettelwell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.

Psalms.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Way of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, Fr. from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wycliffe.

Can knowledge have no bound, but mult advance

So far to make us with for ignorance?

And rather in the dark to grope our way,

Than, led by a false guide, to err by day?
Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,

And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pea son.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument:
nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried;

But we have sure experience for our guide.
Dryden's Fables.

GUIDELESS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governor or superintendent.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows toss'd,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.
Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.
Dryden.

GUIDER. n. f. [from guide.] Director;
regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakespeare.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an unpossibly, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his surgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standard-bearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gild, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society;
a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word guild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution.
Cowell.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art.

It. l's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-eared milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple bolted gate,
For their defrauded absent foals they make
A mean so loud, that all the guild awake.

Pope.

GUILE. n. f. [guille, guile, old French,
the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtily.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing fore,
Her constant heart did count with divers guile;
But words and looks, and signs the did abhor.

Spenser.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! 't his do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shaksp.
We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.
Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn:
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GUILEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Willy; insidious; mischievously artful.
The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile.

Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.

Shakspere's Henry VI.

He saw his guileful act
By eve, though all unweeting, seconded Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The guileful phantom now forsook the throwd,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud.

Dryden's Æn.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Ballianus lay.

Shaksp.

GUILEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

To whom the temper guilefully reply'd. Milt.

GUILEFUL. n. ss. [from guileful.] Free secret treachery; tricking cunning.

GUILELESS. adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness; simply honest.

GUILE. n. f. [from guile. See BE-GUILE.] One that betrays into danger
by insidious practices.

But he was wary wile in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey.

Spenser.

GUILT. n. f. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.
It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry VII.

When uncle two are taken away, the possibility of guilt and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Clothe pent up guilt
Rive your con-claiming continents, and ask Thee dire adulteral summoners grace. Shakspere.

GUILTY. adv. [from guilty] Without innocence, without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.

Shakspere's Richard III.

GUILTYNESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness.

Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shakspere.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaksp.

GUILTLLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shaksp.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakspere's Othello.

Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numbers.

Thou, who dost all thou wishest at thy will,
And never wiltst aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.

The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryd.

Thou knowest how guiltless first I met thy flame,

When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUILTLLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.]
Without guilt; innocently.

GUILTLSSNESS. n. f. [from guiltless.]
Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppress'd. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUILTY. adj. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

Is there not a ballad of the king and the beg-
gar?

The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakspere.

Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence death? Shakspere.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Genejs.

With mortal hatred I puri'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,

Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryd.

Farewel thee stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans.

Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked, corrupt.

All the tumult of a guilty world,
Toft by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson.

GUINEA. n. f. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind;
Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.

GUINEADROPPER. n. f. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadrop's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards.

Gry.

be of Guinea.

GUINEAPEPPER. n. f. [capsicum, Latin.]
A plant. Miller.

GUINEAPIG. n. f. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GUISE. n. f. [The same with wife, guif, French; pija, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own fire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.

Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wife.

Fairfax.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakspere's Macbeth.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chieft
Had to impose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Back, shepherds back:
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise
As mercury did first devise. Milton.

Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. Milton.

2. Practice; custom; property.

I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the foole, and moves the wife. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. Bacon's Essays.

The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so mar-talked of as rickets among children, and susumptions among young people: after these spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, who was the general complaint, and both we thought to appear in many various guises. Templ.

The Hugonets were engaged in a civil war,
the specious pretences of some, who, under
the specious pretences of some, who, under guise of religion, sacrificed to many thousands their own ambition. Swi.

GUITA'R. n. f. [ghitarra, Italian; guitari
Fr.] A stringed instrument of music

Ballads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian sparks guitar. Pri.

GU'LCHIN. } little glutton Skinn.

GULES. adj. [perhaps from goule, a throat.] Red: a barbarous term

heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: guile, gul
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? St. John.

He whose fable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he was couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion Smeared.

GUL

in herp'dry more dismal; head to foot,
as he is total gulf. Shakspeare.

GULF. n. f. [golfo, Italian.]

A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther from the island Curfu, into the gulf of the Istria. Knolles.

In abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Hence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
and brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulph of deep Avernus' hold. Spenser.

I know thou'dst rather flow thine enemy in a fiery gulph, than flatter him in a bower. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.

This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto sent herself into hell: the fall of waters, the eds that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it without a great loss to the world; and multnow have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads could turn giddy at the imagination of gaping gyffes and unfathomable gulfs. Bentley.

A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakspeare.

Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or omach.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,

itches mummy; maw and gulf

Of the ravening salt sea shark;

not of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shakspeare.

GULF. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticofus.

Rivers arise: whether thou be the son of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Dun. Milton.

At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd, ill who the war of ten long years surviv'd,

and escap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope.

High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle sounds the deep roar of disemboguing Nile. Pope.

GULL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old

French] To trick; to cheat; to deraud; to deceive.

It I do not gull him into a nay word, and make in a common recreation, do not think I have it enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakspeare.

Yet love these forgeries did remove, and move

me to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,

but Mart was too too politic. Hudibras.

They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice in this manner, and as often enlured in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,

the vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.

For this advantage age from youth has won,

as not to be out-riden, though out-run;

by fortune he was now to Venus trind,

and with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:

of him disposing in his own abode,

he footh'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL. n. f. [from the verb]

[mergus] A sea bird.

A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shakspeare's Much Ado.

Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not,

'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Gov. of Tongue.

A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us for,

as that ungulate gull, the cuckoo bird;

with the sparrow. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,

kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,

And made the most notorious geck and gull

That e'er invention plaid on. Shakspeare.

That palty story is untrue,

And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

GULLCATCHER. n. f. [gull and catch]

A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shakspeare.

GULLER. n. f. [from gull] A cheat;

an impostor.

GULLERY. n. f. [from gull] Cheat;

imposture. Ainsworth

GULLET. n. f. [goulet, Fr. gula, Lat.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe;

the œsophagus.

It might be his doom,

One day to sing

With gullet in string. Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipes; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated;

for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without whizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors

2. A small stream or lake Not in use.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,

By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet. Arbutnot.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Heylin.

in ebriety, not erring in gulosity, or superfluity of meats. Bacon

TO GULP. v. a. [golpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the mortal was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.

I see the double flaggon charge their hand;

See them puff off the froth, and gulp again,

While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay

GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. Mor.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,

And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.

GUM. n. f. [gummi, Latin]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstruums; whereas resins, being in resulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent. Quincy.

One whose eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,

Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare's Othello.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,

Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller

Her maiden train,

Who bore the veils that holy rites require,

Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden's Fables.

miness and collection of matter. Wifman.

GUMMO'SITY. n. f. [from gummous.]

The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquors, and the clotted fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity. Floyer.

GUMMOUS adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummous or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil. Woodward's Natural History.

GUMMY adj. [from gum.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum

From the utmost end of the head branches

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays

His lazy limbs and drowsy head to raise;

Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GUN. n. f. Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne gunne? Canne is the original of cannon. The general name for firearms: the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dead curies, like the sun 'gainst glass,

Or like an over-need gun, recoil

And turn upon thyself. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Knoll's History.

The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil.

Gloucester.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GUTTURAL. adj. [gutturalis, Latin.] Pronounced in the throat; belonging to the throat.

The Helms have assigned which letters are libal, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

In attempting to pronounce the initials, and some of the vowels spirally, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation. Hollier.

GUTTURALNESS. n. f. [from guttural.] The quality of being guttural. Di.

GUTWORT. n. f. [gut and wort.] An herb.

GUY. n. f. [from guide.] A rope used to lift any thing into the ship. Skinner.

To GUZZLE. v. n. [from gut, or gulf, to guttle, or guffle.] To gormandize; to feed immoderately; to swallow any liquor greedily.

Well leann'd bowls the gossip's spirits raise,
Who while the guzzles chats the doctor's praise.
Reformation.

They fell to lapping and guzzling, till they burst themselves.
L'Estrange.

No more her care shall fill the hollow bay,
To sat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey.
Cay.

To GUZZLE. v. a. To swallow with immoderate gust.

Thy Python king
Was longed I'd of any two-legg'd thing,
Still guzzling must I wine.
Deuden.

GUZZLER. n. f. [from guzzle.] A gormandizer; an immoderate eater or drinker.

GYYR. n. f. [See GYR.] A sneer; a taunt; a foretelling.

Read in gyle, quick answer'd, fussy, and is quarrelous as the wren.
Shakspeare.

To GYYR. v. n. To sneer; to taunt.

The vulgar yield an open ear,
And common courtiers love to gybe and sneer.
Spenser.

GYMNASTICALLY. adv. [from gymnastick.] Athletically; fitly for strong exercise.

Such as with agility and vigour are not gymnastically composed, nor actively use those parts.
Brown.

GYMNASTICK. adj. [gymnastiké; gymnastique, French.] Pertaining to athletic exercises; consisting of leaping, wrestling, running, throwing the dart, or quoit.

The Greeks wisely forbade their servants gymnasticks as well as arms; and yet your modern footmen exercise themselves daily, whilst their enervated lords are softly toiling in their chariots.
Arbutnot.

GYMNICK. adj. [gymniké; gymnique, Fr.] Such as practise the athletic or gymnastick exercises.

Have they not sword-players, and every sort
Of gymnick artists, wrestlers, riders, runners?
Milton.

GYNECOCRACY. n. f. [gynékokratia; gynécocratie, French.] Petticoat government; female power.

GYRATION. n. f. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvia attenuate and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the clefts.
Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyration, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire, the reason of which is, that the rotation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the spectator, until the coal return again to the first place.
Newton.

GYRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in any orbit.

No therefore his app'ard skill to ward,
Or strike, or hurl round to be gyre,
Remember'd to; he could but to the gyre,
But rudely rag'd.
Shakspeare.

Does the wild gyre tow'n into the sky,
And to the top of the air?

On a circle in her gyre the clouds are cast.
He has had the same narrow orbit, that roll
In wheel is gyre about the axle of the world.
Quick and more quick than the gyre of the world,
Then fall's, and in much toon his foot ex-
Dryden.

GYRED. adj. Falling in rings.

Himself, with his doublet and amb'rod,
No but up in his head, he is like a gyre,
Ungeter'd, and down gyre to his ankle.
Shakspeare.

GYVER. n. f. [gyryn, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.

The villain march wide between the legs, as if they had gyres on.
Shakspeare.

And knowing this, should I yet say,
Like such as blow away their lives,
And never will redeem a day,
Enamour'd of their golden gyres?

The poor prisoners, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyres.
Shakspeare.

Gyres and the wall had tam'd thee.
But Telamionus'd be, and nipp'd to meet
A rising roof, that held his fust'ard feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyres unbound.
Dryden.

To GYRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, and I entwine as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smite upon her, do. I will gyre thee in thine own courtship.
Shakspeare's Othello.

H

H

H is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, founded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour; where it is followed by a

VOL. I.

consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

II. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You that look on me as I give out hazards,
What says the golden snail? Shakspeare.

HA

HA

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Hatings! Pope's Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He laugh among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smell the battle afar off. J. S.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions,
Have wrought such confusions,
That the monarch's a slave to the crown. D. J. S.

5 S

HAAK. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.
HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Cowell.

HABERDASHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habt ihr dafs, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon.

A haberdasher who was the oracle of the coffee house, declared his opinion. Adison.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better had habit of frowning than the count palatine. Shakespeare.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infirmity. South.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
 But faction now by habit does obey;
 And wars have that respect for his repose,
 As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterb.

TO HABIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princess Before Leonora:
 She shall be habited as it becomes
 The partner of your bed. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustic dances. Dryden.

HABITABLE. adj. [habitable, French; habitabilis, Latin.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;
 This is her habitable tropic climate. Dann.

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
 Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or knowing it pursue. Dryden.

HABITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitable.]

Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the equinoctial line decides that contrivance of the habitableness of the torrid zone. Mor.

I those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HABITANCE. n. f. [habitatio, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
 That here's a desert hast thine habitation?
 And these rich leas of wealth do't hide apart
 From the world's eye, and from her sight of mace. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

HABITANT. n. f. [habitant, French; habitant, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not earth, but these bright luminaries
 Officious; but to the earth's habitant. Milton.

Powers essential to each other's view
 Stand still consent, though distant far they lie,
 Or bid wants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope.

HABITATION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitation, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.
 A solitude almost immense, with stars
 Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
 Of destined habitation. Milton.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.
 Palaces,
 For want of habitation and repair,
 Disolve to heaps of ruins. Denham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual degradation brought to a lower pitch. Hobbes.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hobbes.

God oft defends to visit men
 Unseen, and through their habitations walks
 To mark their doings. Milton.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators. Bacon.

HABITUAL. adj. [habituél, French; from habit.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in power before.
 Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims.
 By length of time

The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:
 No speck is left of their habitual stains;
 But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden.

'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury.

TO HABITUATE. v. a. [habituare, Fr.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition; with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituare themselves to their vicious practices. Tillotson.

Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Jobson.

HABITUDE. n. f. [habitudinis, Latin; habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Bacon.

The will of God is like a straight and able rule; but the various composition of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or folding conformity to it, or causing several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hobbes's Origin of Morals.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another. Locke.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred, to by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Locke.

In all the habitudes of life,
 The friend, the foe, the wife,
 Vainly we still pursue. Swift

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
 Was such that authors could not give;
 But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use. This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.

Thy ear, inured to charitable sounds,
 And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
 Of just offence, and vulgar ribaldry;
 The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
 Brought by long habitude from bad to worse:
 Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Pope.

H A C

* The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice.

HA'DNAB. adv. [hap ne hap, or nep; as would nould, or ne would; will nill, or ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws, and squares, With cyphers, astral characters, Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em, Although set down habnab at random. Hadib

To HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; hacher, French; from acape, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskillful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no piece wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since past.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou wilt done, and say it was in fight! Shakspeare
Richard the second here was hack'd to death.

I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be hack'd. Shakspeare

One flourishing branch of his most royal root Is set down, and his summer leaves all faded, By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.

Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden

Nor the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field, But purple velvet, and flow'ry garlands please.

But fare with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall, Mock modern faith to murder, hack, and maul. Pope

2. To speak unready, or with hesitation. Dismiss them, and let them question: let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English. Shakspeare

To HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hanmer

HA'CKLE. n. f. Raw silk; any flimsy substance unspun.

Take the hackle of a cock, or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle silk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the bent of the hook. Walter's Angler

You may see the very fashion of the Irish hussleman in his long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his hackqueton, and his habergeon. Spenser's Stat. of Ireland

HAD. The preterit and part. pass. of have.

I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or, it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively: nor is have ever used to that import. We say likewise, it had been better or worse.

I had rather be a country servant maid, Than a great queen with this condition. Shakspeare
Had we not better leave this Urica, To arm Numidia in our cause? Alfieri

HA'DDOCK. n. f. [hadot, French.] A sea fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and hadocks. Carew

HAFT. n. f. [hæft, Saxon; best, Dutch; from To have or hold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

This brandish'd dagger I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast. Dryden
These extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts's Logic

To HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft.

HAG. n. f. [hægerre, a goblin, Saxon; heckle, a witch, Dutch.]

1. A fury; a she-monster.

Thus spoke the impatient pince, and made a prize;

His soul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;

And all the powers of hell, in full applause, Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands. Copland

2. A witch; an enchantress.

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you peacock, you ruminator. Shakspeare

3. An old ugly woman.

Such appellations may become the young; But thou old hag of threescore years and three, Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee. Dryden

To HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions, And hag themselves with apparitions. Hudibras
How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Esfrange

HA'GARD. adj. [bagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.

A hagard hawk, presuming to contend With hardy fowl above his able might, His weary pounces all in vain doth spend, To trusts the prey too heavy for his flight. L'Esfrange

H A I

She's too diddiful; I know her spirits are as coy and wild, As hazard as the rock. Shakspeare

2. [hager, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this sense I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written bagard.

A hag can eat a wolf, and a jolly sort of dogs, with good flesh upon 's back, fed into company together. L'Esfrange

3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.

Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd, His hands and hagard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden

Where are the contemned looks, the face now pale, Now flushing red, the down cast hagard eyes, Or fix on earth, or slowly rais'd? Smith

HA'GGARD. n. f.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a weary widow, Ere three days pass, which I as long lov'd me As I have lov'd this proud diddiful haggard. Shakspeare

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky, And to the south by thy direction fly? Sandys
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the hags, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the haggard. Walter

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew, In a dark grove, the faithful haggard lay, Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformedly; ugly.

For her the rich Arabia sweats her gum; And precious oil from distant Indies come, How haggardly look'd the looks at home. Dryden

HA'GGESS. n. f. [from bag or hack.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

A holy writer.

The Jews divide the holy scriptures of the old testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagglographers.

HAIR. interj. An expression of sudden effort.

Her coats tucked up, and all her motions just, She stamp'd, and then cried hair! at every thrust. Dryden

HAIR. n. f. [hael, Saxon.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling.

Thunder mix'd with hair, Must rend the Egyptian sky. Milton

H A I

To HAIL. v. n. To pour down hail.

My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation when it shall be raining down on the fittest.

Isaiah.

HAIL. interj. [hail, health, Saxon; hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or salus of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Health, hail, brave friend!

Say to the king the knowledge of the brook.

Shakespeare.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds;

It does not look as it would have a hail.

Or oceans whiffed in, as on other moons.

Ben Jonson.

The eagle of the Bullion'd, the lion's that would

Long at the May, second Eve.

Milton.

Wherever the ever-dwelling hail

Infernal world, and thou profoundest hell

Receive thy new-pall'd fire!

Milton.

All hail, to every thy country's grace and love;

Once nift of morn'g dew, now fluff of buds' down.

Dryden.

Hail to the sun! from whose returning light

The cheerful towner's arms now huddle take.

Keats.

To HAIL. v. n. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

A gaily-crowning pair unto the shore, was hail'd by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen.

Knight.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,

And hail me thrice to everlasting rest.

De Witt.

HAIL SHOT. n. f. [hail and shot.] Small shot feathered like hail.

The matter of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill.

Hayward.

HAILSTONE. n. f. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.

You are no more, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice;

Or hailstone in the sun.

Shakespeare.

Hail Aspen, and out thicker on the plain;

Not shaken or lessened by the winds of autumn rain.

Dryden.

HAILY. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail.

From whose dark womb a rithing tempest

Which the cold north congeals to hail showers.

Pope.

HAIR. n. f. [hær, Saxon]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nail do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow.

Quincy.

My head of woolly hair uncurls.

Shakespeare.

Such the evidence of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a certain internal constitution between a complexion and a drill?

Locke.

2. A single hair.

H A L

Naughty lady, These hairs which thou dost ravish from my chin, Will quicken and accuse thee.

Shakespeare.

Much is breeding;

Which, like the comiter's hair, hath yet but life,

And not a serpent's poison.

Shakespeare.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

It is out of the hair

Or let's than just a pound; if the scale turn

But in the estimation of a hair,

Thou dost.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

He judges to a hair of little inducencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written.

De Witt.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a crier of hair, and you a crier of bodies;

if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession.

Shakespeare.

HAIRFEL. n. f. A flower; the hyacinth.

This rascal sat like a hangman upon a pair of galleys; in his right hand he was painted hold-

Who makes that noise there? who are you?
—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakespeare.

Men do not stand
In so ill case; that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;

Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Adison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One said, God bless us! and Amen! the other;

As they had been me with these hangman's hands:
Lusting their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.

HANK. n. f. [hank, Islandick, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word.

Do we think we have the hank that some gallants have on their rustling merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply? Decay of Piety.

To HAN'KER. v. n. [hankeren, Dutch.]

To long importunately; to have an incessant wish: it has commonly after before the thing desired. It is scarcely used but in familiar language.

And now the saints began their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowels hankering,

To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras.

Among women and children, ere is to be taken that they get not a hankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant hankers after something else. L'Estrange.

Doth thou not hanker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always hank'ng after the diversions of the town. Addis.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hank'ngs after its ancient liberty. Adison.

HAN't, for has not, or have not.

That inguith leer of you's makes a pretty woman's heart ache: you han't that sniper about the mouth for nothing. Adison.

HAP. n. f. [anhap, in Welsh, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flow'ring forest path the fled,

In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build

Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the furest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor feared she among the hands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen

The tragick end of many a bloody fray;
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident: perhaps originally hap hazard.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge's sake. Hooker.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To happen; to have the casual consequence.

It will be too late to gather ships or soldiers, which may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser.

2. To come by chance; to befall casually.

Run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd. Shakespeare.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be received are ignorant people. Bacon.

HAP'LESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

Hapless Aegon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shakespeare.

Here hapless Ictinus had found his part,
Had not the fatal cit's guest restrain'd his art. Dryden.

Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would renege the bliss. Smith.

HAP'PLY. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

This love of thens myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakespeare.

To wain

Us, hap'y too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days.

Then hap'y yet your breast remains untouch'd,
Though that seems strange. Rome.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works
Erected hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply flung on the Norway foam,
The pilot or some small night-founder'd skiff
Decem'g some island off, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton.

To HAP'PEN. v. n. [from hap.]

1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.

Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall happen. Isaiah.

Say not I have sinned, and what harm hath happened unto me? Feclui.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surpris'd, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson.

2. To light; to fall by chance.

I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Crane.

HAP'PLY. adv. [from happy.]

1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully:
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua: Shakespeare.
Preferred by conquest, happily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.
Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.
2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope
3. In a state of felicity; as he lives happily.
4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for happly.
One thing more I shall wish you to desist of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HAPPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.
Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be, attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker.
Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.
Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.
The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke
2. Good luck; good fortune.
3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.
Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.
Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.
Form'd by some rule that guides but not constrains,
And finish'd more through happiness than pains. Pope.

HAPPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.
At once, end Uran did Strephon lend Her happy waking hand. Sidney.
Am I happy in thy news?
—If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Beget your happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakespeare.
Truth and peace, and love, shall ever thine
About the supreme throne
Of him, t' whose happy making fight alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.
Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.
2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.
Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.
Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Addressful; ready.

One gentleman happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HAQUETON. n. f. A coat of mail.

Spenser.

HARANGUE. n. f. [harangue, French.
The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of bearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or oratione, orationer, orater, aranger, haranguer.] A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors
mix'd,

Assemble, and harangues are heard, but soon
In factious opposition. Milton.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

Many preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts.

TO HARANGUE. v. n. [haranguer, Fr.]
To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

TO HARANGUE. v. a. To address by an oration; as, he harangued the troops.

HARANGUER. n. f. [from harangue.]
An orator; a publick speaker: generally with some mixture of contempt.

TO HARASS. v. a. [harasser, French, from harasse, a heavy buckler, according to Du Cange.] To weary; to fatigue;
to tire with labour and uneasiness.

These troops came to the army but the day before, harass'd with a long and wearisome march.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,

And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.

Nature oppress'd, and harass'd out with care,
Sinks down to rest. Addison.

Out increases the force of the verb.

HA'RSS. n. f. [from the verb.] Waste; disturbance.

The men of Judah, to prevent
The harass of their land, betest me round. Milton.

HA'RBINGER. n. f. [herberger, Dutch, one who goes to provide lodgings or an harbour for those that sojourn.] A forerunner; a precursor.

Make all our trumpets speak, give them all
breath,

Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death.

I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach. Shaksp.

Sin, and her shadow death, and misery,
Death's harbinger.

And now of love they treat, 'till th' evening star,

Love's harbinger, appear'd. Milton.

Before him a great prophet, to proclaim His coming, is sent harbinger, who all invites.

As Ormond's harbinger to you they run;
For Venus is the promise of the Sun. Dryden.

HA'RBOUR. n. f. [herberge, French;
herberg, Dutch; albergo, Italian.]

1. A lodging; a place of entertainment.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd;
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd.

Daily curs'd
Be all those easy souls who give it harbour. Rowe.

2. A port or haven for shipping.

Three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly. Shaksp.

They leave the mouths of Po,
That all the borders of the town o'erflow;

And spreading round in one continu'd lake,
A spacious and spitable harbour make. Addison.

3. An asylum; a shelter; a place of shelter and security.

TO HA'RBOUR. v. n. [from the noun.]
To receive entertainment; to sojourn;
to take shelter.

This night let's harbour here in York. Shaksp.
They are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord would be. Shaksp.

Southwards they bent their flight,
And harbour'd in a hollow rock at night;
Next morn they rose, and let up ev'ry sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackerel gale.

Let me be grateful; but let far from me
Be harbouring crime, and false dissembling look,
And servile flattery, that harbours oft
In courts and ghid'd roots. Philips.

TO HA'RBOUR. v. a.

1. To entertain; to permit to reside.

My lady bids me tell you, that though the har- bour you as her uncle, she's nothing allied to your disorders. Shaksp.

Knives I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants. Shaksp.

Let not your gentle harbour one thing
Of outrage from the king. Rowe.

We owe this old couple the same kind of genitude that we do to an old friend who harbour us in his declining condition, nay even in his last extremities. Idem.

How people, so greatly warmed with a hope of liberty, should be capable of harbouring such weak superstition; and that so much to be so much only can inhabit the same dwellings. Page.

2. To shelter; to secure.

Harbour you'll find this night in this castle; this country is very dangerous for murdering thieves to trust a sleeping life among them. Shaksp.

HA'ROURAGE. n. f. [herberge, French,
from harbour.] Shelter; entertainment.

Let us, your king, whose labour'd limbs,
Forewarn'd in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shaksp.

HA'ROURER. n. f. [from harbour.] One that entertains another.

HA'ROURLESS. adj. [from harbour.]
Wanting harbour; being without lodging; without shelter.

HARBROUGH, for harbour. Spenser.

HARD. adj. [heapt, Sax. hard, Dut.]

1. Firm; resisting penetration or separation; not soft; not easy to be pierced or broken.

Report you there, while I to the hard house,
More hard than is the stone whereof 'tis rais'd;
Which even but now, demanding after you,
Denied me to come in. Shaksp.

2. Difficult; not easy to the intellect.

Some diseases, when they are easy to be cur'd, are hard to be known. Sidney.

The hard causes they brought unto Moses; but every small matter they judg'd themselves. Exod.

When hard words, jealousies, and fears,
Set folks together by the ears. Hudibras.

'Tis hard to say if Clymene were mov'd
More by his pray'r, whom she so dearly lov'd,
Or more with fury fir'd. Dryden.

As for the hard words, which I was oblig'd to use, they are either terms of art, or such as I substituted in place of others that were too
low. Abraham.

3. Difficult of accomplishment; full of difficulties.

Is any thing too hard for the Lord? Goutfis.

As lords a spacious world, t' our native heav'n Little inferior, by my adventure hard. Milton.

With peril great achiev'd.
Long is the war

And hard, that out of hell leads up to light:
Our prison strong.

He now discern'd he was wholly to be on the defensive, and that was like to be a very hard part too. Chaucer.

Nervous and tendinous parts have more symptoms, and are harder of cure, than fleshy ones. Weseman.

The love and duty which you pay
Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way. Dryden.
Painful; distressful; laborious action or suffering.
Rachael travell'd, and she had hard labour. Genesi.

Worcester's horse came but to-die;
And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,
That not a horse is half of himself. Shakspeare.
Continual hard duty, with little fighting, lessened and diminished his army. Clarendon.
When Sebastian weeps, his tears
Come harder than his blood. Dryden
A man oblig'd to hard labour is not reduced to the necessity of having twice as much victuals as one under no necessity to work. Chzyne.

Cruel; oppressive; rigorous: as, a hard heart.
The bugan of Julius III. may be accounted a very hard one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Who'll leave my sheep, and leave my painful plough,

The needful aids of human life allow;
Switch'd is thy son, so hard a mother thou.
Dryden.

If you thought that hard upon you, we would not refuse you half your time. Dryden.
A lot of one third of their estates will be a very hard case upon a great number of people.
Locke.

No people live with more ease and prosperity than the subjects of little commonwealths; as on the contrary, there are none who suffer more under the grievances of a hard government than the subjects of little principalities. Addison.
To find a bill that may bring punishment upon the innocent, will appear very hard. Swift.

6. Sour; rough; severe.
What, have you given him any hard words of late? Shakspeare.
Rough ungovernable passions hurry men on to say or do very hard or offensive things. Atterb.

hard on his fanatical patrons. Dryden.
Some hard rumours have been transmitted from t'other side the water, and rumours of the severest kind. Swift.

8. Infensible; inflexible.
If I by chance succeed
In what I write, and that's a chance indeed,
Know I am not so stupid, or so hard,
Not to feel praise, or fame's deserv'd reward.
Dryden.

9. Unhappy; vexatious.
It is a very hard quality upon our soil or climate, that so excellent a fruit, which prospers among all our neighbours, will not grow here.
Temple.

10. Vehement; keen; severe; as, a hard winter; hard weather.

11. Unreasonable; unjust.
It is a little hard, that in an affair of the last consequence to the very being of the clergy, this whole reverend body should be the sole persons not consulted. Swift.
It is the hardest case in the world, that Steele should take up the reports of his faction, and put them off as additional fears. Swift.

12. Forced; not easily granted.
If we allow the first couple, at the end of one hundred years, to have left ten pair of breeders, which is no hard supposition; there would arise from thence, in fifteen hundred years, a greater number than the earth was capable of. Burnet.

13. Powerful; forcible.
The flag was too hard for the horse, and the horse flies for succour to the man that's too hard for him, and rides the one to death, and outright kills the other. L'Estrange.

Let them consider the vexation they are treasuring up for themselves, by struggling with a power which will be always too hard for them.
Addison

A disputant, when he finds that his adversary is too hard for him, with slyness turns the discourse. Watts.

14. Austere; rough, as liquids:
In making of vinegar, the vessels of wine over-against the noon sun, which exeth out the more only spirits, and leaveth the spirit more four and hard. Bacon.

15. Harsh; stiff; constrained.
Others, scrupulously tied to the practice of the ancients, make their figures harder than even the marble itself. Dryden
His diction is hard, his figures too bold, and his tropes, particularly his metaphors, must rub stained. Dryden.

16. Not plentiful; not prosperous.
There are bonfires decay'd; and, if the times had not been hard, my billet should have burnt too. Dryden.

from turning unto us. 2 Chron.
It is a melancholy consideration, that there should be several among us so hard of heart, as to be concluded as to think on with a perfect heart for a jest. Enderson.

4. To make insensible; to stupify.
Religion's better us not the example of a stupid block, who had by obstinate principles harden'd himself against all sense of piety; but an example of a man like ourselves, that has a reason-der sense on the least suffering and yet presently endured the greatest. Johnson.
Years have not yet harden'd me, and I have an addition of weight on my spirits since we lost
him. Swift to Pope.

5. To make firm; to endure with confidence.
Then should I yet have comfort? yea, I would harden myself in sorrow. Job.
One tastes the foul, and harden it to virtue;
the other sustains it again, and unbends it into vice. Dryden.

TO HARDEN. v. n. To grow hard.
The powder of loadstone and flint, by the addition of whites of eggs and gum-tragum, made into paste, will in a few days harden to the hardness of a stone. Bacon.

HARDLABOURED. adj. [hard and labour.] Elaborate; studied; diligently wrought.

How cheerfully the hawkers cry
A satire, and the gentry buy!
While my hardlaboured poet pines,
Unfold upon the printer's lines. Swift.

HARDLY. adv. [from bard.]

1. With difficulty; not easily.

Touching things which generally are received, although in themselves they be most certain, yet, because men presume them granted of all, we are hardly able to bring such proof of their certainty as may satisfy gainfayers, when suddenly and besides expectation they require the same at our hands. Hooker.

There are but a few, and they endued with great ripeness of wit and judgement, free from all such affairs as might trouble their meditations, instructed in the sharpest and subtlest points of learning; who have, and that very hardly, been able to find out but only the immortality of the soul. Hooker.

God hath delivered a law as sharp as the two-edged sword, piercing the very closest and most unsearchable corners of the heart, which the law of nature can hardly, human laws by no means, possibly reach unto. Hooker.

There are in living creatures parts that nourish and repair easily, and parts that nourish and repair hardly. Bacon.

The barks of those trees are more close and soft than those of oaks and ashes, whereby the moths can the harder issue out. Bacon.

The father, mother, daughter, they invite;
Hardly the dams was drawn to this repast. Dryden.

That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banners wave again. Shakespeare.

Hardly shall you find any one so bad, but he deserves the credit of being thought good. South.

3. Almost not; barely.

The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part,
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart. Dryden.

There is hardly a gentleman in the nation who hath not a near alliance with some of that body. Swift.

4. Grudgingly, as an injury.

If unwittingly
Have aught committed that is hardly borne
By any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me. Shakespeare.

5. Severely; unfavourably.

If there are some reasons inducing you to think hardly of our laws, are those reasons demonstrative, are they necessary, or mere possibilities only? Hooker.

6. Rigorously; oppressively.

Many men believed that he was hardly dealt with. Clarendon.
They are now in prison, and treated hardly enough; for there are fifteen dead within two years. Addison.

They have begun to say, and to fetch instances, where he has in many things been hardly used. Swift.

7. Unwelcomely; harshly.

Such information comes very hardly and harshly to a grown man; and however softened goes but ill down. Locke.

8. Not softly; not tenderly; not delicately.

Heav'n was her canopy; bare earth her bed;
So hardly lodg'd. Dryden.

HARDMOUTHED. adj. [hard and mouth.]

Disobedient to the rein; not sensible of the bit.

'Tis time my hardmouth'd courters to controul,
Apt to run riot, and transgress the goal. Dryden.
But who can youth, let loose to vice restrain?
When once the hardmouth'd horse has got the rein.
He's past thy power to stop. Dryden.

HARDNESS. n. f. [from bard.]

1. Durity; power of resistance in bodies.

Hardness is a firm cohesion of the parts of matter that make up masses of a sensible bulk, so that the whole does not easily change its figure. Locke.

From the various combinations of these corpuscles happen all the varieties of the bodies formed out of them, in colour, taste, smell, hardness, and specific gravity. Woodward.

2. Difficulty to be understood.

This label on my bosom
Is so from sense in hardness that I can Make no collection of it. Shakespeare.

3. Difficulty to be accomplished.

It was time now or never to sharpen my intention to pierce through the hardness of this enterprise. Sidney.

Concerning the duty itself, the hardness thereof is not such as needeth mien ait. Hooker.

4. Scarcity; penury.

The tenants poor, the hardness of the times,
Are ill excuses for a servant's crimes. Swift.

5. Obduracy; profligateness.
Every commission of sin introduces unto the soul a certain degree of hardness, and an aptness to continue in that sin. South.

6. Coarseness; harshness of look.

By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. Rip.

7. Keeness; vehemence of weather or seasons.

If the hardness of the winter should spoil them, neither the loss of seed nor labour will be ruinous. Milton.

8. Cruelty of temper; savageness; harshness; barbarity.

We will ask,
That if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Shakespeare.
They quicken flames, perplexities untie,
Make toughness smooth, and hardness molten. Dryden.

9. Stiffness; harshness.

Sculptors are obliged to follow the manners of the painters, and to make many ample tools, which are insufferable hardnesses, and more like rock than a natural garment. Dryden.

10. Faulty parsimony; stinginess.

HARDNOCK. n. f. I suppose the same with burdock.

Why he was met ev'n now,
Crown'd with rank sumner and furrow-weeds,
With hardocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers. Shakespeare.

HARDS. n. f. The refuse or coarser part of flax.

HARDSHIP. n. f. [from bard.]

Recite
The feats of Amazons, the fatal fight
Betwixt the hardy queen and hero knight. Dryden.

Who is there hardy enough to contend with the teporach which is prepared for thee, who dare venture to dissent from the received opinions of their country? Lucan.

Could thirst of vengeance, and desire of fame,
Excite the female breast with martial flame?
And shall not love's diviner pow'r inspire
More hardy virtue, and more generous fire? Prior.

2. Strong; hard; firm.

Is a man confident of his present strength?
An unwholesome blast may shake in pieces his hardy fabric. South.

3. Confident; impudent; vitiously stubborn.

HARE and HERE, differing in pronunciation only, signify both an army and a lord. So Harold is a general of an army; Harman, a chief man in the army; Herwin, a victorious army; which are much like Stratocles, Polemarchus, and Hegesistratus among the Greeks. Gibson's Camden.

HARE. n. f. [hara, Saxon; karb, Erse.]

1. A small quadruped, with long ears and short tail, that moves by leaps, remarkable for timidity, vigilance, and fecundity; the common game of hunters.

Dimay'd not this

Our captains Macbeth and Banquo?

As pairrows, eagles; or the hare, the lion.

Shakespeare.

We view in the open champaign a brace of swift greyhounds coursing a good stout and well-breathed hare.

More.

Your dressings must be with hare's fur.

Wise man.

Poor is the triumph o'er the timid hare

Thomson.

2. A constellation.

The hare appears, whose active rays supply

A nimble force, and hardly wings deny. Greesh

TO HARE. v. n. [harier, French.] To fright; to hurry with terror.

To hare and late them, is not to reach but vex them. Locke.

HAREBELL. n. f. [bare and bell.] A blue flower campaniform.

Thou shalt not lack

The flow'r that's like thy face, pale primrose;

nor

The wurd harebell, like thy veins. Shakespeare

HAREBRAINED. adj. [from hare, the verb, and brain.] Volatile; unsettled; wild; fluttering; hurried.

That harebrained wild fellow begins to play the fool, when others are weary of it. Bacon.

2. An herb. Ainsworth.

HAREFLIP. n. f. A fissure in the upper lip with want of substance, a natural defect. Quincy.

The blots of nature's hand

Shall not in their issue stand;

Never mole, harelip, nor scar,

Shall upon their children be.

Shakespeare.

The third stitch is performed with pins or needles, as in harelips. Wise man.

HARESEAR. n. f. [bupleurum, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

HARIER. n. f. [from hare.] A dog for hunting hares. Ainsworth.

TO HARK. v. n. [contracted from hearken.] To listen.

The king.

To me inveterate, harks my brother's suit. Shaks.

Picking up his ears, to hark

If he could hear too in the dark. Hulibrus.

HARK. interj. [It is originally the imperative of the verb hark.] List! hear! listen!

What harmony is this? My good friends, hark! Shakespeare.

The butcher saw him upon the gallop with a piece of flesh, and called out, Hark ye, friend, you may make the best of your purchase. L'Estrange.

Hark! methinks the roar that late pursu'd me,

Sinks like the murmurs of a falling wind. Rowe.

Hark how loud the woods

Invite you forth!

Thomson.

HARL. n. f.

1. The filaments of flax.

2. Any filamentous substance,

The general sorts are wicker hives, made of privet, willow, or harl, daubed with cow-dung. Mortimer.

HARLEQUIN. n. f. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a budy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented Mr. Harley's house, whom his friends called Harlequino, little Harley. Trev.] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zani.

The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

The man in graver tragick known, Though his best part long since was done, Still on the stage desires to tarry;

And he who play'd the harlequin, After the jest still loads the scene,

Unwilling to retire, though weary. Prior.

HARLOT. n. f. [berlodes, Welsh, a girl. Others for borelet, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Hurlet is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge.] A whore; a strumpet.

Away, my disposition, and possess me with

Some harlot's spirit. Shakespeare.

They help thee by such aids as geese and

The barbarous harlots crowd the publick place;

Go, fool, and purchase an unclean embrace. Dryden.

HARLOTRY. n. f. [from harlot.]

1. The trade of a harlot; fornication.

Not shall,

From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail

Gaunt harlotry, while thou art clad so thin. Dryden.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

A peevish self-would harlotry,

That no persuasion can do good upon. Shaksp.

HARM. n. f. [hearm Saxon.]

1. Injury; crime; wickedness.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.

We, ignorant of ourselves,

Bring often our own harms, which the wife Powers,

Deny us for our good. Shakespeare.

How are we happy still in fear of harm?

But harm precedes not sin. Milton.

They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil courses. Swift.

TO HARM. v. a. To hurt; to injure.

What sense had I of her stolen hours or lust?

I saw 't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me. Shakespeare's Othello.

Passions ne'er could grow

To harm another, or impeach your rest. Waller.

After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat, should harm them. Ray.

HARMFUL. adj. [harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious; detrimental.

His dearly loved squire

His spear of heben-wood behind him bare,

Whose harmful head, thrice heated in the fire,

Had given many a breast with pike-head square. Spenser.

Let no man fear that harmful creature less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality. Raleigh.

For flax and oats will burn the tender field,

And sleepy peopies harmful harvests yield. Dryd.

HARMFULLY. adv. [from harmful.] Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.

A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only vainly, but harmfully in such kind of exercise. Ascham.

HARMFULNESS. n. f. [from harmful.]

Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.

HARMLESS. adj. [from harm.]

1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful.

Touching ceremonies harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it amiss to decree that those things that were least needful, and newest come, should be the first that were taken away? Hosier.

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye

On him, her brothers, me, her matter; hating

Each object with a joy. Shakespeare.

2. Unhurt; undamaged.

The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore put his work slightly, according to a slight price. Raleigh.

HARMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.]

Innocently; without hurt; without crime.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Hutton.

Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible,

but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers. Decay of Piety.

HARMLESSNESS. n. f. [from harmless.]

Innocence; freedom from tendency to injury or hurt.

When, through tasteless flat humility,

In dough-baked men some harmfulness we see,

'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.

Compare the harmfulness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenious pliability to virtuous counsels, which is in youth

untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness,

the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the continued obstinacy in an aged long-practised finer. South.

HARMONICAL. } adj. [ἀρμονικός; harmoni-

ac, French.]

HARMONICK. } adj. [harmoni- que, French.]

1. Relating to music; susceptible of musical proportion to each other.

After every true whole note, nature requir-eth, for all harmonical use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon.

2. Concordant; musical; proportioned to each other; less properly.

Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and passive; but blackness, and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon.

So swells each wind-pipe; as it tones to us,

Harmonick twang of leather, horn and brass. Pope.

HARMONIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, French,

from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; symmetrical.

All the wide-extended sky,

And all the harm none worlds on high,

And Virgil's sacred work shall dye. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other;

musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move harmonious numbers. Milton.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us;

they who lived with him, thought it musical. Dryden.

HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos like, together crush'd and bruish'd;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree.

Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom.

Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music.

Stillingfleet.

HARMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

To HARMONIZE. v. a. [from harmony.]
To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Love fit it invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion we start'd, harmoniz'd the chime.

Dry.

HARMONY. n. f. [ἁρμονία; harmonie, French.]1. The just adaptation of one part to another.

The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony.

Bacon.

The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs.

Denham.

Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all it works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity.

Chrys.

2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.

The sound
Symphonious, of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelic harmonies.

Milton.

Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united.

Watts.

3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.

In us both, one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear.

Milton.

I no sooner in my heart divin'd,
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet!

Milton.

HARNESS. n. f. [harnois, French; supposed from iern or hiern, Runick; hiarn, Welsh and Erse iron.]1. Armour; defensive furniture of war.
Somewhat antiquated.

A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet.

Spenser.

Of no right, nor colour like to right,
He do fill fields with harness.
Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Shakespeare.

2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state; of other carriages we say geer.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.

Shakespeare.

Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground.

Dryden.

To HARNESS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in armour.

He was harnest light, and to the field goes he.

Shakespeare.

Full fifty years, harnest'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the bitter winter's blast.

Rowe.

2. To fix horses in their traces.

Before the dour heron chariot stood,
All ready harnest for journey new.

Spenser.

Harnest the horses, and get up the harnemen,
and stand forth with your helmets.
When I plough my ground, my horse is harnест and chained to my plough.
To the harnest yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil.

Thomson.

HARP. n. f. [heapp, Saxon; harpe, Fr.]
It is used through both the Teutonic and Roman dialects, and has been long
in use.

Romanusq; lyræ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpæ.
Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempest cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,

Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spens.
They touch'd their golden harp, and hymning prais'd

God and his work.

Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre.

Dry.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies

The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
This when sweet Orpheus struck, to lit'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks.

Creech.

To HARP. v. n. [harper, French, from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps.

Revelations.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harp'd?

1 Cor.

The helmeted cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir.

Milton.

You harp a little too much upon one string.

Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To mark the truth appear.

Shakespeare.

For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'lt harp'd my fear aright.

Shakespeare.

He seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was.

Shakespeare.

HARPER. n. f. [from harp.] A player
on the harp.

Never will trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue;
Nor wooe in rhyme, like a blind harper's song.

Shakespeare.

I'm the god of the harp: stop my fair self;—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again.

Tickell.

HARPING IRON. n. f. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fasten'd to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe;
Who, when he felt his side so rudely guard'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd.

Waller.

HARPONEER. n. f. [harponeur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.HARPOON. n. f. [harpoun, French.] A harping iron.HARPISCHORD. n. f. A musical instrument, strung with wires, and played by striking keys.HARPY. n. f. [harpysia, Latin; harpie, harpe, French.]1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures, which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured.

Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this a y
as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle.

Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any amissage to the pignus, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy.

Shakespeare.

HARQUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSS.]
A hand-gun.HARQUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from harquebuis.]
One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in rank.

Kiln.

HARRIDAN. n. f. [corrupted from harrdelle, Fr. a worn-out worthless horse.]

A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a bitter'd harridan;
Now 'nothing's left but winter'd, pale, and shunk:

To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.

Swift.

HARROW. n. f. [charrou, French; harck, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the feed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows.

Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down.

Mort.

To HARROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,

Not only thy person, but also thy beans.

Tupper.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can't thou bind the uneven with his hand in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee?

Job.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy.

Shakespeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young
blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres.

Shakespeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd;
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the tending rack.

Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather.

Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions.
[from hepgram, Saxon.] Obsolete.

H A S

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet; on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hast are the same.
- HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. f. [haste, Fr. haste, Dut.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!
But O, thou wilt not, can't not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear.
Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, to the last age writ:
In both we find like negligence and wit.

In as much haste, as I am, I cannot forbear giving as example.
The wretched father running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade.

2. Passion; vehemence

I find in my haste all men are liars.

To HASTE. } v. n. [haster, French;
To HASTEN. } hasten, Dutch.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.

I have not hast now being a pish to follow thee.

2. To move with swiftness, eagerness, or hurry.

'Tis Ciana, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Ciana, where haste you to?

They were troubled and hasted away.
All those things are pass'd away like a shadow, and as a puff that hasted by.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity.
These times perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Flies to the nether world, his destin'd way.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Fyle, the royal youth shall haste.
Soon as the sun awakes, the springy court
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport.

To HASTE. } v. a. To push forward;
To HASTEN. } to urge on; to precipitate; to drive a swifter pace.

Let it be hasted, that supper be ready at the first by five of the clock.
All types of fustian from your arms are past,
To have as now, you must out run haste.
Each time his camp with distant lustre crown'd;
Each knows his end with different periods bound,
And in his place through the liquid space,
Not a haste friends his neighbour's race.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Ariens are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as hatch mews, where Athanasius's creed is not heard.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour.

5. [from hacher, French, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound, through others' arms,
his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatched.
Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the asle-

On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian eyes
To his experienc'd tongue.

Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of mimed meat in painting, are never able to deceive the fight.

That excellent author has shown how every particular custom and habit of virtue, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practise it.

20. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt. They seem to be imperative expressions; have this at you; let this reach you; or take this; have with you; take this with you; but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as more elliptical; as, we will have a trial at it, or at him.

He that will cope with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at it with you.

I never was out at a mad frolic, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word.

TO HEAR. v. n. [hýran, Saxon; hooren, Dutch.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Holder.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes, nor bear with their own ears. Temple.

HEAT. n. f. [heat, hæz, Saxon; heete, Danish].
1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.
Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.
 The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.
2. The cause of the sensation of burning.
 The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.
3. Hot weather.
 After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.
 Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood!
 The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
 Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.
 The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.
4. State of any body under the action of the fire.
 The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.
5. Fermentation; effervescence.
6. One violent action unintermitted.
 The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age: and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.
7. The state of being once hot; a single effort.
 I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
 And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.

Her triumphant sons in war succeed,
And slaughtered hecatombs around him bleed. Addison.

HECTICAL. } adj. [hectique, French, HECTIC. } from ἥκτις.]

1. Habitual, constitutional

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction. It is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.

A hectic fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be controuled. Denon.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

No hectic student fears the gentle maid. Taylor.

HECTICK. n. f. A hectic fever.

Like the hectic in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hofm.

3. To encircle for defence.

England, hedged in with the main.
That water-walled bulwark, still secure And confident from foreign purposes. Shakespeare.

There's such divinity doth bedge a king, That treason can but peep to what it would. Shakespeare.

4. To shut up within an enclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to bedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange. Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but bedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a bedge.

HED

You forget yourself.

To bedge me in. Shakespeare. Jul. Caf.

When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer: I pray thee, let me bedge one moment more into thy promise; for thy life profess'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to bedge in some business of your own. Swift.

To HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

Into what pit thou seest,
From what height fall'n! Milton.

An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addis.

2. Altitude; definite space measured upward.

Abroad I'll study thee,
As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Dante.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon.

An amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;
That when a man was plac'd in one degree
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

3. Degree of latitude. Latitudes are higher as they approach the pole. Guinea lieth to the north sea, in the time of the year, as Peru to the south. Almagest.

4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence; high place.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dry.

4. Elevation of rank; station of dignity; great degree of excellence.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd. Shakspeare.
Ten kings had from the Norman conqueror reign'd,
When England to her greatest height attain'd,
Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth, and state. Daniel.

Every man of learning need not enter into these difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.

6. The utmost degree; full completion.

Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once. Bacon.

Did not the
Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret, wrested from me in the heights
Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton.

Hide me from the face
Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! Milton.
Despair is the height of madness. Sherlock.

7. Utmost exertion.

Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakspeare.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate

Foreign states used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evil of a civil war. Addis.

4. To improve by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; and in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden.

HEINOUS. adj. [baineux, French, from bane, hate; or from the Teutonic, hoon shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ if men or angels should attempt, it were more heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooke.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakspeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

HEINOUSLY. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

HEINOUSNESS. n. f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences, provoking God, as jests and trifles, must have little sense of the heinousness of them. Roger.

HEIR. n. f. [heire, old French; heres Latin.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Lock.

What lady is that?
—The heir of Alançon, Rosalind her name. Shakspeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's beirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.
Being beirs together of the grace of life. i. Pet.
Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,
And I his beir in misery alone. Pope.
The beirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

2. One newly inheriting an estate.
The young extravagant beir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate,
Swift.

To HEIR. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His son in blooming youth was snatch'd by fate
One only daughter beir'd the royal state. Dryden.

HEIRESS. n. f. [from beir.] An inher-itrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;
All that was her's to him did give. Waller.

Aneas, though he married the beirs of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryden.

HEIRLESS. adj. [from beir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That beir'd it hath made my kingdom. Shakspeare.

HEIRLOOM. n. f. [beir and geloma, goods,
Saxon.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,
Transmitted to the hero's line;
Thence through a long descent of kings
Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

HEIRSHIP. n. f. [from beir.] The state,
character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will to build an hospital within a year, under pain of his being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe.

HELD. The preterit and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Pope.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.

HELICAL. adj. [heliague, Fr. from hēlos.] Emerging from the lullre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its helical ascent. Brown.

HE' IACALLY. adv. [from helical.]
From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but helically, that is, its emersion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their calendar days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises helically; and rainy in the winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

HELICAL. adj. [belice, Fr. from hēlos.]
Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a veltis at one end of it. Wilkins.

HELIOCENTRIC. adj. [heliocentrique,
French; hēlos and kentron.]
The heliocentric place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun,
if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

HELION PARABOLA in mathematics, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge toward the centre of the said circle. Harris.

HELIOSCOPE. n. f. [helioscope, Fr. hēlos and σκοπία.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

HELIOTROPE. n. f. [hēlos and τροπή;
heliotrope, Fr. heliotropium, Lat.] A plant that turns toward the sun; but more particularly the turnsol, or sunflower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather. Gow. of the Tongue.

HELISPHERICAL. adj. [helix and sphere.]
The helihspherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearest and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it.
Harris.

HELIX. n. f. [belice, Fr. hēlos.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins.

HELL. n. f. [helle, Saxon.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakspeare.
If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old tuning the key. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that full may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold
The glorious light he forfeited of old. Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.
I will go down to my son mourning to hell.
Genesis.

of death overtook me. Psalms.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;
They of both ends the middle two do fly;
The two that in mid-place, hell called were,
Must strive with waiting foot and watching eye,
To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,
That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.

5. The place into which the tailor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had as well
As the bold Trojan knight seen hell;
Not with a counterfeit'd pais
Of golden bough, but true gold-lace. Hudibras.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,
Who might deserve a place in his own hell.
King's Cook-ry.

6. The infernal powers.

Much danger felt, much toil did he sustain.
While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain. Cowley.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,
And quench'd the stelled fires. Shakspeare.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With soul enfolded smoak and flaming fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth into the skies. Spenser.

HELL-BROTH. n. f. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing;
For charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakspeare.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.]

Consigned to hell
And reckon't thou thyself with spirits of heaven, Milton.

Hell doom'd and breath'd defiance here and flour,

Where I reign'd king? Milton.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide and ate him quick,
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd. Shakspeare.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toils these treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shakspeare.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.]

Haunted by the devil.
Fierce Omond close in the bleeding bark
And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds.
Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dry.

HELL-HOUND. n. f. [helle hund, Sax.]

1. Dog of hell
From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept,
A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death. Shakspeare.
Now the hell-hounds with superior speed
Had reach'd the dame, and, fastning on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd
My hell-hounds to lick up the druff, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton.

HELL-KITE. n. f. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

Did you say all? What all? Oh, hell-kite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

HELLKORE. n. f. [helleborus, Latin.]
Christmas flower.

HELLEBORUS. White. n. f. [veratrum, defence; Sighelm, victorious defence;

Berthelm, eminent defence: like Amyntas and Boetius among the Greeks.

Gibson's Camden

HELM, n. s. [helm, Saxon, from helan, to cover, to protect.]

1. A covering for the head in war; a helmet; a morion; a headpiece.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land;
With plumed helm the slayer begins his threats.

Shakespeare.

2. The part of a coat of arms that bears the crest.

More might be added of helms, crests, mantles, and supporters.

Camden's Remains.

3. The upper part of the retort.

The vulgar chymists themselves pretend to be able, by repeated cohobations, and other fit operations, to make the distilled parts of a conciete bring its own caput martium over the helm.

Boyle.

4. [helma, Saxon.] The steerage; the rudder.

They did not leave the helm in storms;
And such they are most happy states.

B. Jonson.

More in prosperity is reason lost
Than ships in storms, their helms and anchors lost.

Denham.

Fair occasion shews the springing gale,
And me rest guides the helm, and honour swells the sail.

Prior.

5. The station of government.

I may be wrong in the means: but that is no objection against the design: let those at the helm contrive it better.

Swift.

6. In the following line it is difficult to determine whether steersman or defender is intended: I think steersman.

You slander

The helms o' th' state, who care for you like fathers,

When you censure them as enemies.

Shakespeare.

TO HELM, v. a. [from the noun.] To guide; to conduct.

Hanmer.

The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must give him a better proclamation.

for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shaksp. As you like it.

Still new favourites the chose,
'Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the foreign pow'r;
Would'rous beautiful her face;

But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

HER

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shaksp. Henry v.

She cannot seem defam'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.
The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again. Cowley.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HERS. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms as hers.

This pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakspere.

Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not hers confess. Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not hers but yours. Dryden.

HERALD. n. f. [herault, Fr. herald,
German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust enigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,

For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I poet here, no herald am. Ben Jonson.

When time shall serve let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakspere's King Lear.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.

Please thy pride and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakspere.
It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shakspere.

Their teeth are fitted to their food, the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derbam.

HERBAGE. n. f. [herbage, French]

1. Herbs collectively; grafs; pasture.

Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;

Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields.

Dryden.

At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Woodward.

2. The tithe and the right of pasture.

Ainsworth.

HERBAL. n. f. [from herb.]

A book

containing the names and descriptions of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals,

and other like books of natural history. Bacon.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Brown.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof. Moore.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants.

Baker.

HERBALIST. n. f. [from herbal.]

A man

skilled in herbs.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.

Fairy Queen.

HERBARIST. n. f. [herbarius, from her- ba, Latin.]

One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much sway'd by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours, or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Ray.

As to the fuci, their feed hath been discovered and shew'd me first by an ingenious herbarist.

Derbam.

HERBELET. n. f. [diminutive of herb,

or of herbula, Latin.]

butcher, and baker; even my herbwoman duuned me as I went along. Arbutnot.

HERBY. adj. [from herb.]

Having the nature of herbs.

No substance but earth, and the precedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any moss or herby substance. Bacon.

HERD. n. f. [heord; Saxon.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black-cattle.

Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.

Note a wild and wanton herd,

Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,

Fetching mad bounds. Shakspeare.

There find a herd of heifers, wand'ring o'er

The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore.

Adison.

2. A company of men, in contempt or detestation.

Survey the world, and where one Cato thines,

Count a degenerate herd of Catilines. Dryden.

I do not remember where ever God delivered his oracles by the multitude, or nature truth by the herd. Locke.

3. It anciently signified a keeper of cattle, and in Scotland it is still used. [hyrd,

Saxon.] A fensie still retained in composition: as, goalherd.

To HERD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.

Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer.

Dryden.

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to undear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm.

Norris.

2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem

One of the number. Adison's Cato.

Run to towns, to herd with knaves and tools,

And undistinguished pass among the crowd.

Watts.

To HERD. v. a. To throw or put into a herd.

The rest,

However great we are, honest and valiant,

Are *herd*d with the vulgar. Ben Jonson.

HERDROOM. n. f. [herd and groom.]

A keeper of herds. Not in use.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?

That shall yonder herdgroom, and none other.

Spenser.

HERDMAN. } n. f. [herd and man]

HERDSMAN. } One employed in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,

In whom no evil did reign, or good appear.

Sidney.

And you, enchantment,

Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou

These rural latches to his entrance open,

I will devise a cruel death for thee. Shakspeare.

Scarce themselves know how to hold

A theephook, or have learn'd ought else the least

That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs.

Milton.

There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,

Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds

At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milt.

HER

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear

Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.

Dryden.

The herdsman, round

The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd. Dryden.

When their herdsman could not agree, they parted by content. Locke.

HERE. adv. [hen, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]

1. In this place

Before they here approach,

Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,

All ready at a point, was setting forth. Shakspeare.

I, upon my frontiers here,

Keep residence. Milton.

Here nature first begins

Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,

While he his second misery suffers here!

To day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:

'Tis finish'd. Dryden.

4. In drinking a health.

However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;

To him who was the king, the friend replies.

Prior.

5. It is often oppos'd to there; in one place, distinguished from another.

Good-night, mine eyes do itch;

Doth that bode weeping?

—'Tis neither here nor there. Shakspeare.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakspeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave,

implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers.

Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-briar, and honey suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single prophelyte. Government of the Tongue.

Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Spratt's Sermons.

He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas

in another. Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;

Thou lovest her, a better where to find. Shakspeare.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.]

About this place.

I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Augustus's bridge. Adison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakspeare.

The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd,

departs

From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd

Egypt. Milton.

Hereafter he from war shall come,

And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.

You shall be happy here, and more happy

HERFATER. n. f. A future state.

This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;

'Tis heaven itself that points out an herafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.

I still shall wait

Some new herafter, and a future state. Prior.

HERESY. adv. [here and at] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his domestive, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended heresat, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HERBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.

In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not herby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Herby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite con-cernment: herdy we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HEREDITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarch hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's.
Locke.

HEREDITAMENT. n. f. [heredium, Lat.]

A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HEREDITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.]

By inheritance.
Here is another, who thinks one of the created glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily.
Pope to Swift.

HEREDITARY. adj. [hereditarius, Fr.

hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom.
Shakespeare.

These old fellows

Have their ingratitude in them hereditary.
Shakespeare.

He shall ascend

The throne hereditary, and bound his reign With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens. Milton.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend

Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,

Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes,

Betholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden's Cato.

When heroic verse his youth shall raise,

And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden's Fugate.

HERETIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.

How highly forever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not heret offend us. Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done heret.
Shakespeare.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation,
are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them,
unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, heret the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HERETO. adv. [here and into.] Into
this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HERETO. adv. [here and of.] From this, of this.

Heret comes it that since Harry is valiant.
Shakespeare.

HERETO. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

If we should strictly insist heret, the possibility might fall into question. Brown's Fulg. Err.

HERETO. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing.
Here-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except heresat, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremitical, from eremite, of eremus, a desert; heremique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for asceticism in a rock. Pope.

HERESARCH. n. f. [heresarche, French; αρχης; αρχη] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.

The pope declared him not only an heretic,
but an heresarch. See heretic.

HERESY. n. f. [heresie, French; heresis, Latin; αἵρεσις] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholic and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hoar.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of party, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissimulation. King Charles.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, French;
αἱρετικός.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their wild opinions like these Epicureans. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick
instead of a father. Biber on Learning.

When a papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means protestants; when a protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentionally obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I shall well suspect the sun with cold
Than she with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith. Shakespeare.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal personification, heretical, who, in their opinion, not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that these words had from heretical teaching. Deacy of Pity.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.]

With heresy.

HER-TO. adv. [here and to.] To this;
add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.]

Formerly; anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, without knowing your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more

Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO. adv. [here and unto.] To
this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man herunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that who affecteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

A heretofore might not be able to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Taylor.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With
this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith offended,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand.
Spenser.

Herewith the title of Flame was introduced, insisted by the Sicilian. Bayle.

HERET. n. f. [heretick, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he demands from the vry; for he should be the true possessor of the land, but the alive dis-penseth with his conscience to pay it over with a compliment and an heret every year. Hooker.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heret due.

I took him up, as your heret, with intention to have made the best of him, and then has brought the whole produce of him in a put to you. Dryden's D. n. S. S. S.

HERITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Capable to inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England.
Hall's Common Law.

HERITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Hol. Tals.
He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day. Rieu.

2. [in divinity.] The people of God.
O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Common Prayer.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [herma-phrodite, Fr. from herm and phrodite.]

An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right

Canonical hermaprodite. Cresswell.

Monstrosity could not incarnate from marriage, witness hermaprodites. Arbuthnot's Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from herma-phrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and be herma-phroditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms. Brown.

HERMETICAL. } adj. [from Hermes, hermetick. } or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; her-metique, French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quercy.

The tube was closed at one end with hermetically. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.]

According to the hermetical or chymick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper: and not only so, but in vessels covered with paper.

the lawn, so as to admit the air, and keep out the insects; no living thing was ever produced there.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, ignarus.]

A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A withered hermit, five-score winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shaksp.
You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place. I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render.

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison.

2. A headman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermit. Shaksp.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.]

The cell or habitation of a hermit.
By that painful way they pass Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And like a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen.
Go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of ev'ry star that heav'n doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermit, as it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.]

A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMIDACTYL. n. f. [ἡρμιδᾶκτυλ and δακτύλ.]

Hermidactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in breadth. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used.

HERN. n. f. [contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb.

HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed.

HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

King of heros and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things.
Hercules animated marble frown.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue.

These are thy honours, not that here thy bust is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect: as, a hero in learning.

HEROES. n. f. [from hero; herois, Lat.]

A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.

In which were held, by sad disease,
Heroes and herois.

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Besitting a hero; noble; illustrious; heroic.

Mulidous was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprizes.
Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to a hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad; And, in one word, heroically mad.

HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]

1. Productive of heroes.

From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroic line.

2. Noble; suitable to a hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroic name
To person, or to poem.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Verse makes heroick virtue live,
But you can life to verses give.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and success of a most just and necessary war.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to a hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic.

HEROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.

But more worth, that fortune can controul,
New-stung, and bluster bent her sister soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confin'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.

Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heros from you.

HEROISM. n. f. [heroïsme, French.] The qualities or character of a hero.

If the Odyssy be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality.

HERON. n. f. [heron, French.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So loud, with tips of flag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull.

The heron, when she soareth high, she with winds.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.

The towing hawk let future poets sing,
Who terror bears upon his rising wing;
Let them on high the frighted be a turkey,
And lofty numbers paint their any fray.

HERONRY. n. f. [from heron, com.]

the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens.

HERRING. n. f. [haring, Fr. haring, Saxon.] A small sea fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackerel, and cod.

Buy my herring fresh,

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before; as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;

If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers.

And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human found,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground.

HERSE. n. f. [herse, low Latin; supposed to come from heptan, to praise.]

This is likewise written hearse; see HEARSE.

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse?

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent herse shall besiege your gates.

To HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a herse.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot,
And the jewels in her ear. O, would she were laid at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin.

The Graves put fully drew from the dusts the corse,
And herse it, bearing it to rest.

he herse is herse about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree.

HERSELF. pronoun.

1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.

The jealous of a worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them goddesses,
Are mighty goddesses in this monarchy.

2. Being in her own power, mistress of her own thoughts.

The more the looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun: as, the hurt herself.

The daughter of Herod came down to wash herself.

She returned answer to herself.

HERSELF. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old testament if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like as carols.

HERY. v. a. [heran, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow, to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thence, now is the time of merry-making,
Not her to her, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked day.

The biatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the biatus itself. Pope.

HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion. Brown.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [Corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this, or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bidewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And biccus doccius play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
He had been both friend and foe to crimes.

HICCOUGH. n. f. [bicken, Danish] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if he had the biccough o'er and o'er. Cleavel.
Sneezing cureth the biccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown.
If the stomach be hurt, singultus or biccough follows. Wifeman.

To HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To fob with convulsion of the stomach.

To HICKUP. v. n. [corrupted from biccough.] To fob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up.
Or, when I'm in a fit, to bickup. Hudibras.

HICKWALL. n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.
HICKWAY. n. f. The part. pass. of hide.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;
And what merits merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Other hiden cause
Left them superior. Milton.
Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

To HIDE. v. a. pret. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hidan, Sax.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avant, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee! Shaksp.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shaksp.
Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

Thus the fire of gods and men below:
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The sev'ral parts lay hidden in the piece;
The occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.
Then for my corps a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas hid with maves, chariots passing o'er
The channel; on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such unexhausted sources of perfection? Addison.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

VOL. I.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is fill'd with peace. Roscoe's Royal Convert.

To HIDE. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open farrest in the shade:
Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride, Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hut. Galliver.

HIDE. n. f. [hyde, Sax. haude, Dut.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon past
Through nine bull hides each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.

Psalmist was swift to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shaksp.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a simuli'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hyde, hyde, French; hida, barbarous Latin,
as much as one plough can till] Ainsworth.

One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Wotton.

HIDEBOUND. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from overriding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.
A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it.
Bacon's Natural History.

Like stunted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

And still the harsher and hidebinder
The dancels prove, become the fonder. Hudib.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ainsworth.

HIDEOUS. adj. [bideux, French.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.

Some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shewn. Shaksp.

I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back rebounded death. Milton.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissing fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects:
the following use is less authorized.

'Tis forced through the sluices at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward's Natural Hist.

3. It is used by Spenser in 2 sense not now retained; detectable.

O hideous hanger of dominion! Spenser.

HIDEOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Hor-ribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I am myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shaksp.

This, in the poet's application, is hideously
profane; but the sense is intelligible. Gallier.

HIDEOUSNESS. n. f. [from hideous.]
Horribleness; dreadfulnefs, terror.

HIDIOUS. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.

To HIDE. v. n. [hæzan, Saxon.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was flint; then each to rest him hies. Fairy Queen.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shaksp.

Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shaksp.

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whar for aid;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel.

The snake no sooner hid,
But virtue heard it, and away she hies, Craford.

Fluther, full fraught with malicious revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cruel hour, he hies. Milton.

Thus he advis'd me, on you aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither hy'd him. Craford.

HIERARCH. n. f. [hîeros and ἀρχη; hie- rarche, French.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarch in orders bright. Milton.

HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, Fr.]
Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HIERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchie of angels thence,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the east. Faust.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchie. Donne.

Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Favour'd with his winged hierarchie,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

Thence the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule.
Each in his hierarchie, the orders bright. Milton.

The blessed of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchie, began to be so important, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to him. Heath.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the displeasure of Scotland than the hierarchie of England. Lisson.

While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops.

HIEROGLYPH. } n. f. [hieroglyphes, French; ἱερός, sacred, and γλύφω, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyph of life.

The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyph.

Between the statues cheliks were plac'd, And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a flatly hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble.

The Egyptian serpent figures time, And stup'rd, rears into his prime; If my affection, thou would'st win,

Let call thy hieroglyph a kin The original of the cone it was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total venty, which was but partly true in its morality.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyph of the sun.

HIEROGLYPHY. n. f. [ἱερός and γλύφω.] Holy writing.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [ἱερός and φανός.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest. Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests, and the hierophants, abundantly grained the fancies of the people.

HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology, probably corrupted from haggle.] 1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be penurious and miserly. It argues an ignominious mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and chaffer in the ends.

To be so thus, for a few pence, Is in thy knight an open spence.

Woe all this higgle with thy friend about, What's the end of the noble and rich John Bull?

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLY-PIGGLY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. from [higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [heah, Saxon; hoog, Dut.]

1. Long upward; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep, or long downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

High, o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,

That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.

3. Exalted in nature. The highest faculty of the soul.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.

HIM

Three sides are sure imbar'd with craggs and bills,

The rest is easy, scant to rise esp'd;
But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art.

Fairfax.

When our eye some prospect would purview,
Descending from a bill, looks round to view.

Granville.

A bill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral which, by a platlick virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.

Gibyne.

HILLLOCK. n. f. [from bill.] A little hill.

Yet weich this, alas! great is not great to the greater.

What, judge ye, doth a hilllock show by the lofty Olympus

Sidney.

Sometime walking not unseen,
By hedge row elms, on hilllocks green.
This mountain, and a few neighbouring hilllocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions.

Addison.

HILLY. adj. [from bill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.

Towards the hilly corners of Druma remain her very yet aborigines, thrall amongst an assembly of mountains.

Howell.

Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar.

Dryden.

Lo! how the Norrick plains
Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights.

Platt.

Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chuse to travel through a plain one.

Addison.

HILT. n. f. [Hilt, Saxon, from healban, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now fits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets.

Shakespeare.

Take thou the hilt,

And when my face is cover'd as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.

Shakespeare.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brais displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze.

Pope's Odyssey.

HIM. [him, Saxon.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he restored unto my office, and him he hang'd.

Genesis.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

The subjunctive mood hath evermore some conjunction joined with him.

Accidence.

HIMSELF. pron. [him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical, and more expressive of individual personality.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself.

Bacon.

With shame remembers, while himself was one
Of the same herd, himself the same had done.

Denham.

2. It is added to a personal pronoun or noun, by way of emphatical discrimination.

He himself returned again.

Judges.

God himself is with us for our captain.

Chron.

3. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd

Above the clouds as high as heav'n himself.

Shakespeare.

4. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

David hid himself in the field.

Samuel.

HIN

5. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit set a work by a reprovable badness in himself.

Shakespeare.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy.

South.

By HIMSELF. Alone; unaccompanied

Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

Kings.

HIN. n. f. [𐌺𐌹𐌺] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints. With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil.

Dryden.

HINDER. adj. [from hind] That is in a position contrary to that of the face; opposed to fore.

Bears, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet; and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement.

Sidney.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body roared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back.

Addison.

HINDERANCE. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction; with of, sometimes with to, before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

Fallie opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions, more pernicious than the first; yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first.

Hacker.

They must be in every christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance.

Hooker.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done?

Dryden.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hinderance in pursuit of love? Dryd.
He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice.

Asterbury.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

Genesis.

Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost.

Shakespeare.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most] The last; the lag; that comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind.

Deuteronomy.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages call,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last,
A losing gamester.

Dryden.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run.

Pope.

HINGE. n. f. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate

Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning.

Milton.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,

And where the way they cannot find, they force,

Denham.

Heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high;

At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd.

Dryden.

2. The cardinal points of the world, east, west, north, and south.

If when the moon is in the hinge at east,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives.

Cicero's Manilian.

3. A governing rule or principle

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not merit

by the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue. Temple.

4. To be off the HINGERS. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order, and off the hinges; and till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted. Tillotson.

Metlinks we stand on ruins, nature shakes About us, and this universal frame So loose, that it but wants another push To leap from off its hinges. Dryden.

70 HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as a hinge.

Be thou a flatterer now, and binge the knee, And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe, Like off thy cap. Shakespeare.

70 HINT. v. a. [enter, French, Skinner.]

To bring to mind by a slight mention, or remote allusion; to mention imper- fectly.

2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small horses to let.

HIRUT. adj. [hirutus, Lat.] Rough; rugged.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirute roots: the hirute is a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon's Natural History.

HIS. pronoun possessive [hyr, Saxon.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approach makes as fierce As waters to the tucking of a gulph. Shakespeare.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Heav'n and yourself

Had part in this fair maid; now heav'n hath all, And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life. Shakespeare.

If our father carry authority with such dispo- sition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us. Shakespeare.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his. Locke.

Whene'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;
And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his. Addison.

2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare.

Not the dread'd spout,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear In his descent. Shakespeare's Timon and Gress.

There's not the smallest orb, which thou see'st hold 't,

But in his motion like an angel sings,

Still quivering to the young-eyed cherubins. Shakespeare.

This rule is not so general, but that it ad- mitseth his exceptions. Cicero's 3rd or. of Cornelia.

Open forth some of his poisonous quality if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as, the man his ground, for the man's ground. It is now rarely thus used as its use proceeded probably from a false opinion that the s formative of the genitive was his contracted.

- Where is this mankind now? who lives to age Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Donne.
By thy foud comfort, by thy father's cares,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope.
4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shakspeare.

5. Anciently before self.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Shakspeare.

To Hiss, v. n. [bissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames and cooled glowing hot, in that forge, like a horseshoe; think of that; hissing
hot. Shakspeare.

The merchants shall hiss at thee. Ezekiel.
See the furies arise:
See the snakes that they rear,

How they hiss in their hair. Dryden.

Around the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which hissing as it flew,
Pierced through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a publick exhibition; which is sometimes done by hissing.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace!
Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sanby.

To Hiss, v. a. [hircan, Saxon:]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.
Every one will hiss him out of his disgrace.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hiss'd off the stage. Merr.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vault applaus, and others hiss'd off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hiss'd out of all the courts as ridiculous?
Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I Play too; but to disgrace'd a part, whose office
Will hiss me to my grave. Shakspeare. Winter's Tale.

What's the newest grief?
—That of an lion's age doth hiss the lion.
Each minute seems a new one. Shakspeare. As You Like It.

Hiss, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

He hiss'd for hiss, re-ur'd, with forked tongue
To forked ton us. Milton.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss the sound
Of publick scorn. Milton.

Peace, champion fortitude, that knows no fears

Of hiss, blows, or want, or loss of eare. Pope.

Hiss, interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some thought it a corruption of huff, huff it, huff it, huff it; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence.] An exclamation commanding silence.

More silence hiss along!
'Lest phid and will design a song,
In her sweetest fiddled plight.

Smoothing the road and brow of night Milton.
Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away,

doctor for here's a whole pack of dinals coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN, n. f. [historicus, Lat. hista- rien, Fr.] A writer of facts and events;
a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee divine Historian! Milton.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison.

Not added years on years my task could clofe.
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTORICAL, adj. [historique, Fr.
HISTORICK, adj. [historicus, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Barnet's Theory.

Here rising bold the patriot's honest face;
There warriors bidden in historick brain. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY, adv. [from historical.]

In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spake, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To HISTORIFY, v. a. [from history.]

To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify,
Her praise, whose praise, to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney.

The third age they term historicon; that is such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed. Brace.

HISTORIOGRAPHER, n. f. [isotix and grapho; historiographie, French.] A historian; a writer of history.

The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers. Addison.

I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs. A bishop's History of John Ball.

HISTORIOGRAPHY, n. f. [isotix and grapho.] The art or employment of a historian.

HISTORY, n. f. [isotix; historia, Lat.
histoire, French.]

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Caesar seems the poet's lays:
It is to history he trusts for praise. Pope.

2. Narration; relation.

The history part lay within a little room. Wise man.
What histories of toil could I declare?

But still long-weary'd nature wants repair. Pope.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.
History, so far as it relates to the affairs of the bible, is necessary to divines. Watts.

HISTORY PICTURE, n. f. A picture representing some memorable event.

His works resemble a large history picture, where even the less important figures have some convenient place. Pope.

Greek.]

HISTORIONICK, adj. [Latin, historion, French.] Befitting the stage; tunable to a player; becoming a buffoon; theatrical.

HISTORIONICALLY, adv. [from historio- nical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

To HIT, v. a. [from ictus, Latin, Min- sbew; from hitte Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken;
and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would particularly mine eyes that they were deceived. Shakspeare.

His confidence shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. Shakspeare.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?
Or naked he, disguis'd in all our sight?
If he be blind, how hits he so right? Shakspeare.
So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, as to hit the mark with a shaking hand. Scott.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him. Shakspeare.

Search every comment that your care can find,
Some here, some there, my hit the poet's mind.
Johnson.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Auribon.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.

Hail, divinest melancholy!
Whole family village is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight. Merr.

5. To strike; to catch by the right butt;
to touch properly.

There you hit him: St. Dominick does charity exceedingly: that argument never talk with him. Dryden.

6. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can hit off this great secret need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Locke.

- 7 To HIT out To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he might needs in hitting out some of their tunes. Shakspeare.

To HIT, v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extensive alone, how can they move and hit one against another? or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension?
Locke.

Bones, teeth, and shells, being sustained in the water with metallick corpuscles, and the fish corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon the bodies, become conjoined with them. Watts.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest and despair most fits. Shakspeare.

HIT

1. To succeed; not to miscarry.
The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part. Bacon's Natural History
But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit. Hudibras
This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible.
Dryden

All human race would fain be wits,
And millions milt for one that hits. Swift
To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon

You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar
It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon 't when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estrange
None of them hit upon the art. Addison

There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley
Hit. n. f. [from the verb]

A stroke

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakespeare's Hamlet

So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd
And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd. Dryden

A chance; fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Granville

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras
The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it was in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estrange

If casual concurrence did the world compose
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackstone

A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shakespeare

These hits of words a true poet often finds,
Without seeking. Dryden

If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
How deep he toasts the toasting lasses. Prin

HITCH. v. n. [hitegan, Saxon, or bocher, French. Skinner.] To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage; nor here know well what it means.

Whoe'er offends at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hits in a rhyme;
Voted to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burden of some merry song. Pope

HITCHEL. v. a. [See HATCHEL.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL. n. f. [heckel, German] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

Cæsar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion! hither came. Spenser

Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither. Shakespeare

Who brought me hither
Will bring me hence, no other guide I seek. Milton

2. it is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this topick of argument: [huc, Latin. Huc re; exilium.] Not much used.

Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of saints in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God. Hooker

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson

HITHER. adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; toward this part.

After these,
But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighbor'ing hills descended. Milt

An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely that extreme wherein it is finite. Hart

HITHERMOST. adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side

That which is external can be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost extreme. Hale

HITHERTO. adv. [from hither.]

1. To this time; yet.

As Verio I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryden

2. In any time till now.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whides the famous ancients
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Fairy Queen

3. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, tho' they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker
Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd

I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milt

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces ev'ry day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden

He could not have failed to add the opposition of all spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryd

To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift

HITHERWARD. } adv. [hyðenpeard, Sax.] This way;

HITHERWARDS. } toward this place.

And only hitherward. Shakespeare's Coriolanus

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherward intended speedy. Shakespeare

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton

HIVE. n. f. [hyfe, Saxon.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

HOA

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their lives and houses driv'n away. Shakespeare

So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appeal their rage, invite them to the bive. Waller

Bees have each of them a hole in their bives; their honey is their own, and every bee minding her own concerns. Addison

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry bive of bees -
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shakespeare

3. A company being together.

What modern mansions call a lodge, was by antiquity called a bive of free mansions; and therefore, when a dissolution happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift

TO HIVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne

Look homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, wait the hapless youth!
Milton.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures home,

They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return.
Dryden.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence.
Dryden.

HO'MICIDE. n. f. [homicide, Fr. homici-dium, Latin.]1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood:
construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden;
but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood.
Hooker.

2. Defraction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black defraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives.
Dryden.

3. [homicide, Fr. homicide, Lat.] A mur-derer; a man-slayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.

and homiletical; not those lazy fullen ones of the cloyster.
Atterbury

HOMILY. n. f. [homilie, French; ὁμιλία.]

A discourse read to a congregation.
Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons.
Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people!
Shaksp. As you like it

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the basileus of the day.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

congregation of homogeneous parts.
Boyle

Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous con-cretion, whose material is properly water.
Brown's Vulgar Errors

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other: gold from iron, sulphur from album, and so of the rest.
Woodward's Natural History

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneous, and similar: and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I shall compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.
Newton

HOMOGENEALNESS. n. f. [from homo- HOMOGENEITY. n. f. geneous, or homo- HOMOGENEOUSNESS. n. f. geneal.] Participation of the same principles or nature;

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.
—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dowry. Shakespeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language, goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty, in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple

HONEY. n. f. [huniſ, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Hill.

Of honey, the first and sweetest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure; and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the buds in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach, through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves. Hill.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shaksp.
Touching his education and first fostering,
Some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees.
Raleigh's History.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot. L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sops, resolvent of the bile, balsamick, and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuthnot

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring:
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.
The king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare

3. Sweet; sweetness; a name of tender-ness. [Mel; corculum.]
Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote. Shakespeare
Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee. Dryden.

To HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live
In the rank sweet of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HONEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.]
The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept again in winter. Grew's Microscopium.

HONEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.]
The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects.
How honey-dews embalm the fragrant moon,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HONEY-GNAT. n. f. [melio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect. Ainsworth.

HONEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.]
The first month after marriage when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his suety for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to die's till the honey-moon is over. Addison

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Lat.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakespeare.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.
Then mellow beat and honey-suckles pound;
With these alluring favours strew the ground. Dryden.

HONEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthe, Lat.] A plant.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton.

2. Sweet; luscious.
When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shaksp.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison.

This monument is only honorary, for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HONOUR. n. f. [honneur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.
2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not used.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the separated councils:
His honour and myself are at the oar;
And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shakespeare.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours
Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shakespeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholds thee, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thou honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakespeare

It by honour & meant any thing distant from conference, 'tis no more than a regard to the conference and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shaksp.
His grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants
—Ha! 'tis he indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shaksp.
This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

But the honour flav'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for it. Shaksp.
She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the tolly of my foul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be look'd against. Shaksp.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect; with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet's Theory.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.
Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wale's Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shaksp.
Honours were confer'd upon Antoinette by Hadian in his infancy. Wotton's Rom. Hist.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here slaves, or if you will, a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The tree then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

14. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shaksp.

To HO'NOUR. v. a. [honorar, French;
honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was call'd our father, and was continually honour'd of all men, as the next person unto the king. Ejher.

The poor man is honour'd for his skill, and the rich man is honour'd for his riches. Feetus.

He that is honour'd in poverty, how much more in riches. Feetus.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We flourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition, Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd. Shaksp.

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number

3. To glorify.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honour'd upon

Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptian ans may know that I am the Lord. Exodus.

HO'NOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Isaiah.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you.
Since I am charged in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shaksp.

3. Conferring honour.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs?
Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Such this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her caste to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Spenser.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here 's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman: let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shaksp.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven. Mac.
Methinks I could not die any where so contended as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shaksp.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The Earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure if they answered, they did conceive him to be to honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hay.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purposed marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shaksp.

8. Equitable.

that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

HOOF, in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood;
fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

HOOF. n. f. [hod, Saxon, probably from hepod, head.]

The upper covering of a woman's head.
In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd: Dryden.

Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.
2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him. Wotton.
The lucerna came, from being a military habit to be a common dress; it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbuthnot.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

eyes.

They willingly hood-wink themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will blind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the league of the adventurers. Shaksp.

Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,

Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one lout,
And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a post. Ben Jonson.

Satan is fain to hood-wink thee that start. Decay of Piet.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks mens minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?

Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Race.
On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds
reort,

The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garth.

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If I knew What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world, I would pursue it. Shakespeare
A quarell, ho, already! what's the matter?

About a hoop of gold, a pearly ring. Shaksp.
To view to Lewis a town, and to restrain,
What hoops of iron could my spleen contain! Dryden's Juvenal.

And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a forthugale.

At coming in you saw her stoop.
The entry brush'd against her hoop. Swift.
All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at a distance. Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addison.

To Hoop. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and

He fought them both, but wish'd his hop might find, Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope

Of what so seldom chanc'd; when to his wish, Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton.

The Trojan dames To Pallas' fane in long procession go,

In hopes to reconcile their heavenly foe. Dryden.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear of't. B. Strange.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.

HOP

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Maccabees.

Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Ecclesi.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quarter'd. Shakspeare.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain, And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope; To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakspeare.

She was his cure, his hope, and his delight, Most in his thought, and ever in his sight. Dryden.

HOPE. n. f. Any hoping plain between the ridges of mountains. Ainsworth.

To HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Taylor.

My wife, by fioms long lost, Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;

And finds more favour by her ill success, Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.

Who knows what adverse fortune may befall! Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryden.

2. To place confidence in another.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Psalm.

To HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.

The sun shines hot; and it we use delay, Cold-biting winter mars our hop'd for hay. Shakspeare.

So funds the Thracian herdsmen with his spear Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

HOPEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

He will advance thee: I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish. Shakspeare.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be, Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore. Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly concerted, whatsoever they took in hand. Hooker.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

Whatever all the friendless orphan bears, Bereav'd of parents in his infant years, Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain, It hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope.

HOP

HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with early sons and heirs. Wotton.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Lath. Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous entreaties we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Glanville.

HOPEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful.]

Promise of good; likelihood to succeed. Set down beforehand certain figures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be described what the child will prove in probability. Wotton.

HOPELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Wanting hope; being without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hooker.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Shakspeare.

He watches with greedy hope to find His wish, and best advantage, us asunder; Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each To other freely and might lend aid. Milton.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state, And hopeless to prevail by open force, Seeks hid advantage. Dryden. State of Innocence.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie In duress, doom'd a lingering death to die. Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless word of never to return, Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shakspeare.

HOPE. n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hopes, who turn the fable, because the strong expectation of a good celestial salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents. See.

HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the premeditated contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in tedious and amazement of confidence, but also boldly, hopefully, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.

HOPEFUL. n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg. Ainsworth.

HOPEFUL. n. f. [commonly called Seven hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HOPEFUL. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason tremie or tremue.]

1. The box or open frame of wood in which the corn is put to the ground.

The split of the lake Asphaltites shooteth out perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill. Girard.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of mill: their maw is the hopper which holds at fustens the grain, letting it drop by degrees in the stomach. Arbuthnot on Animals.

Just at the hopper will I stand, In my whole life I never saw grit ground, And mark the clack how justly it will found. Bacon.

2. A basket for carrying seed.

HOPEFUL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

Howe'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horol orbit ceases,
The whole stands full, or breaks to pieces. Prior

HORARY. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.
I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot to tell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sleepers. Tatler

2. Continuing for an hour.
When, from a basket of summer-fruit, God
by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, merely was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ORDE. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people. It is applied only to the Tartars.

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery link,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thompson

ORIZON. n. f. [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real;
the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakspeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakspeare

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon

In his east the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round,
Insected with bright rays. Milton

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams to light,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous light. Dryden

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison

HORIZONTAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

Near the horizon.
As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton

1. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.
An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt
by Augustus. Brown

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.]

In a direction parallel to the horizon.
As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley

HORN. n. f. [hurn, Gothic; horn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

1. The hard bodies which grow on the heads of some gaminivorous quadru-peds, and serve them for weapons.
No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth

Bacon
Zelus rises through the ground,
Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,
That tolles back his horns in vain. Addison

All that grows in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.

The quire 'gan miter to approach,
And wind his horn under the cattle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen

And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden

Four Acanians, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden

3. The extremity of the waxing or waining moon, as mentioned by poets.
She blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden

The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thompson

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakspeare

Audius,
Hearing of our Marcus's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were mislaid when Marcus stood for Rome, Shakspeare

And durst not once peep out.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

excellent use. Miller

HORNBOOK. n. f. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.

He teaches boys the horn-book. Shakspeare
Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the horn-book and primer. Locke

To master John the English maid
A horn-book gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior

HORNED. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.

As when two rams, stur'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts to hence on either side
Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock,
Attorn'd both stand fenceless as a block. Fairy Queen

Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Donham
Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn

Suffices latets to the fruitful corn. Dryden

HORNER. n. f. [from horn.] One that works in horn and tells horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they thrive their horns. Greuc

HORNET. n. f. [hyymette, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Since, in times of suff'ring, is the best;
'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryd

Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Mortimer

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham

HORNROOT. n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick men, that did not only quake!
With horn-foot horses, and brass wheels, Jove's forms to emulate. Hakewill

HORNOWL. n. f. A kind of horned owl.
Ainsworth

HORNSPIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A country dance, danced commonly to a horn.

A lusty taberne,
That to three many a hornpipe play'd,
Whereto they dance each one with his maid. Spenser

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis. Raleigh

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine
Run to the feet veins, and refine
Your firkhum junkum to a dance Shall fetch the dilllers out of France,
To wonder at the hornpipe here
Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Ben Jonson

Florida danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler

HORNSTONE. n. f. A kind of blue stone.
Ainsworth

And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolic figure. Ray on the Creation

Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet. Dryden

The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, the greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concreate. Arbutnot

3. Hard as horn; callous.
Tynheus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryd

HOROGRAPHY. n. f. [horographie, Fr.
ὥρα and γραφω.] An account of the hours.

HOROLOGE. } n. f. [horologium, Lat.] HOROLOGY. } Any instrument that tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

He'll watch the horologe a double set,
 If drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare.

Before the days of Jerome there were horolo- gies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammina. Brown.

HOROMETRY. n. f. [horometrie, French;
ῥαση and μετρησις.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown.

HOROSCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; ὥροσκοπος.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh hour, or opposite signs every seventh year, opposeth living creatures. Brown.

Hum burn beneath a boiling horoscope,
 His fire the bleary'd Vulcan of a shop,
 From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope,
 This governs life, and thus marks out our parts,
 Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Creech.

They understood the planets and the zodack by instinct, and tell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bentley.

HORRENT. adj. [horrens, Latin. Hor- rentia pilis agmina.] Pointed outward; horrid with points: a word perhaps introduced by Milton.

 Of fiery seraphim incircled round
 With bright imblazony, and horrent arms. Milt.

HORRIBLE. adj. [horribilis, French;
horribilis, Latin.] Dreadful; terrible;
 shocking; hideous; enormous.

No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be lights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon.

A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
 As one great furnace flamed. Milton

O fight
 Of terror, soul and sight to behold,
 Horrid to think, how horrible to feel. Milton.

Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are,
 of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South.

 French.]

1. Terror mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

Over them sad horreur, with grim hue,
 Did always soar, beating his iron wings;
 And after him owls and night ravens flew,
 The hateful messengers of heavy things. F. Quen.
 Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
 Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
 But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
 A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies.

Mc damp horror chill'd
 At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold. Milton.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
 Their pride is humble'd, and their fear conſent. Dryden.

2. Dreadful thoughts.

I have sapt tall with horrors;
 Dizenets, tantular to my slaughterous thoughts,
 Cannot once flate me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Gloom; dreaminess.

Her gloomy patience saddens all the scene,
 Shades ev'ry flower, and darkens ev'ry green;
 Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
 And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of thuddering or shinking. Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and to there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History.

HORSE. n. f. [hopp, Saxon.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.

Duncan's horse, the minions of the race,
 Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shaksp.
 A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! Shakespeare's Richard III.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses. Locke.

2. A constellation.

Thy face, bright centaur, autumn's heats retoin,
 The softer season suiting to the man;
 Whilst winter's shivering goat afflicts the horse
 With frost, and makes him an uneasy source. Creech.

3. To take horse; to let out to ride.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, whi-is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison

To Horse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse; to furnish with a horse.

He came out with all his clowns, horſed upon such cart-jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself, if that were thrust, I with none of my friends ever to thrive. Shakspeare.

After a great fight there came to the camp
 Gonzalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horſed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this? Who answered, It is St. Elmo, who never appears but after the storm. Bacon.

2. To carry one on the back.

Let us to France; like horseleeches, my boys, The very blood to suck. Shakespeare.

2. [from leech; signifying a physician.] A farrier. Ainslie.

HORSE LITTER n. f. [horfe and litter.] A carriage hung upon poles between two horses, in which the person carried lies along.

He that before thought he might command the waves of the sea, was now cast on the ground, and carried in an horse litter. 2 Mac.

HORSEMAN n. f. [horfe and man.]

1. One skilled in riding.

A skilful horfeman, and a huntsman bred. Dryden.

2. One that serves in wars on horseback.

Encounters between horfemen on the one side, and foot on the other, are seldom with extremity of danger; because as horfemen can hardly break a battle on foot, to men on foot cannot possibly chase horfemen. Hayward.

In the early times of the Roman commonwealth, a horfeman received yearly tria milia acri, and a foot soldier one mille; that is more than six-pence a day to a horfeman, and two-pence a day to a foot soldier. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. A rider; a man on horseback.

With descending showers of brimstone fir'd, The wild barbarian in the storm expir'd; Wrapt in devouring flames the horfeman rag'd, And spur'd the feed in equal flames engag'd. Addison.

A horfeman's coat shall hide Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side. Prior.

HORSEMANSHIP n. f. [from horfeman.]

The art of riding; the art of managing a horse.

He vaulted with such ease into his seat, As if an angel dropt down from the clouds, To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus, And witch the world with noble horfmanship. Shakespeare.

They please themselves in terms of hunting or horfmanship. Wotton.

His majesty, to shew his horfmanship, slaughter'd two or three of his subjects. Addison.

With kindness to strangers.

Ye thus hospitably live.

And strangers with good cheer receive. Prior.

The former liveth as proudly and hospitably as the other. Swift.

HOSPITAL n. f. [hospital, French; hospitalis, Latin.]

1. A place built for the reception of the sick, or support of the poor.

They who were so careful to bestow them in a college when they were young, would be so good as to provide for them in some hospital when they are old.

I am about to build an hospital, which I will endow handsomely for twelve old husbands.

Addison.

2. A place for shelter or entertainment. Obsolete.

They liv'd a goodly castle, plac'd
Foreby a river in a pleasant dale,
Which chusing for that evening's hospital,
They thither march'd.

Fairy Queen.

HOSPITALITY. n. f. [hospitalité, Fr.]

The practice of entertaining strangers. The Lacedæmonians forbidding all access of strangers into their courts, are, in that respect, deservedly blamed, as being enemies to that hospitality which for common humanity's sake, all the nations on the earth should embrace.

Hooker.

My matter is of a churlish disposition, And little reck's to find the way to heav'n By doing deeds of hospitality.

Shakespeare.

How has this spirit of faction broke all the laws of charity, neighbourhood, alliance, and hospitality.

Swift.

HOSPITALIER. n. f. [hospitallier, Fr.]

hospitallarius, low Latin, from hospitalis.] One residing in a hospital in order to receive the poor or stranger. Used perhaps peculiarly of the knights of Malta.

The first they reckon such as were granted to the hospitaliers in utulum beateii.

Ayliffe.

TO HOSPITAFF. v. a. [hospitor, Latin.]

To reside under the roof of another.

That always chuses an empty shell, and this hospitates with the living animal in the same shell.

Grew's Musæum.

HOST. n. f. [hoste, French; hostes, hospitis, Latin.]

1. One who gives entertainment to another.

Homer never entertained either guests or hosts with long speeches, till the mouth of hunger be stopped.

Sidney.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree For your good host.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. The landlord of an inn.

Time's like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer.

Shakspeare. Tristram and Cressida.

3. [from hostis, Latin.] An army; numbers assembled for war.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear 't before him, thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze your chariot wheels.

Milton.

After these came arm'd, with spear and shield,
An host so great as cover'd all the field.

Dryden.

4. Any great number.

Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let all tidings tell Themselves, when they be felt.

Shakespeare.

5. [hostia, Latin; hostie, French.] The sacrifice of the mass in the Romish church; the consecrated wafer.

TO HOST. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To take up entertainment; to live, as at an inn.

Go, beg it to the centaur, where we host;
And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee.

Shakespeare.

2. To encounter in battle.

Strange to us it seem'd
At first, that angel should with angel war,
And in fierce hostings meet.

Milton.

New authors of dissension spring from him,
Two branches, that in hostings long contend,
For foreign sway.

Philips.

3. To review a body of men; to muster. Obsolete.

Lords have had the leading of their own followers to the general hostings. Spenser on Ireland.

HOSTAGE. n. f. [ostage, French.] One given in pledge for security of performance of conditions.

Your hostages I have, so have you mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.

Shakespeare.

Do this message honourably;
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

Shakespeare.

He that hath wife and children, hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief.

Bacon.

They who marry give hostages to the public, that they will not attempt the ruin or disturb the peace of it.

Atterbury.

The Romans having seized a great number of hostages, acquainted them with their resolution.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

HOSTEL. n. f. [hostel, hostellerie, Fr.]

HOSTELRY. n. f. An inn. Ainsworth.

HOSTESS. n. f. [hostess, French, from host.]

1. A female host; a woman that gives entertainment.

Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guests to night.

Shakespeare.

You were beaten out of door,
And rail'd upon the hostess of the house.

Shakspeare.

Be as kind an hostess as you have been to me,
and you can never fail of another husband.

Dryden.

2. A woman that keeps a house of publick entertainment.

Undistinguish'd civility is like a whore or a hostess.

Temple.

HOSTESS-SHIP. n. f. [from hostess.] The character of an hostess.

It is my father's will I should take on me
The hostess-ship o' th' day: you're welcome, sir.

Shakespeare.

HOSTILE. adj. [hostilis, Latin.] Adverse; opposite; suitable to an enemy.

He has now at last
Giv'n hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of deputed justice, but on the ministers

Shakespeare.

That do distribute it.

Shakespeare.

Fierce Juno's hate
Added to hostile force, shall urge thy fate.

Dryden.

HOSTILITY. n. f. [hostilité, French, from hostile.] The practices of an open enemy; open war; opposition in war.

Neither by treason, nor hostility
To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.

Shakespeare.

Hostility being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland.

Hayward.

What peace can we return,
But, to our pow'r hostility and hate,
Untam'd reluctance and revenge?

Milton.

We have shew'd ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity.

Atterbury.

HOSTLER. n. f. [hosteller, from hostel.] One who has the care of horses at an inn.

The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way.

Spenser on Ireland.

HOSTRY. n. f. [corrupted from hosteller.] A place where the horses of guests are kept.

Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd,
And studded wheels are on its back sustain'd;

Dryden.

An hostry now for waggons, which before
Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore.

Dryden.

HOT. adj. [Lat, Saxon; hat, Scottish.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?
—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

—No, though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produce, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing to hot as about nine in the forenoon.

Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And fast with hard, and light with heavy mist.

Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from rare commotion of so very small corpuscles.

Newton.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out.

Shakespeare.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa.

Shakspeare.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults that had been known.

Bacon.

He refused to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and pled it with artillery.

Clarendon.

To court the cry directs us, when we found
The assault to hot as if 'twere only there.

Denham.

Our army
Is now in hot engagement with the moors.

Dryden.

4. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, lord Mortimer, you are as fix'd
As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

Shakespeare.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispense,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense.

Denham.

Achilles is impatient, hot, revengeful;
Patient, considerate, and careful of his people.

Dryden.

5. Fager; keen in desire.

It is no wonder that men, either perplexed at the necessary affairs of life, or hot in the pursuit of pleasures, should not seriously examine their tenets.

Locke.

She has, quoth Ralph, a jointure,
Which makes him have to hot a mind t' her.

Hudibras.

6. It is applied likewise to the desire, or sense raising the desire, or action excited: as, a hot pursuit.

Nor law, nor checks of conscience will we hear,
When in hot scent of gain and full career.

Dryden.

7. Piquant; acrid: as, hot as mustard.

Ho'tben. n. f. A bed of earth made hot by the fermentation of dung.

The bed we call a hotbed is this: there is taken horse-dung, old and well rotted; this is laid upon a bank half a foot high, and supported round about with planks, and upon the top is cast sifted earth two fingers deep.

Bacon.

Preserve the hotbed as much as possible from rain.

Frey.

- HOTBRAINED. adj. [hot and brain.]

Violent; vehement; furious. Cerebralis

You shall find 'em either hotbrained youth,
Or needy bankrupts.

Dryden's Spanish Free.

- HO'TCHPOT. n. f. [hachée en pot]

HO'TCHPOTCH. n. f. French; or hachée en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled hash; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rule

Littleton.

HOT

to a Babellish confusion than any one entire language.

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture of hotch-potch of many talices is unpleasant to the taste.

Bacon's Natural History.

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcals would remain;

But a madd'd heap, a hotch-potch of the slain.

Dryden's Juvenal.

OTCOCKLES. n. f. [hautes coquilles, Fr.] A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles, for that was by pinching, not by striking.

Arbuthnot and Pope

As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of munny a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye.

Gau.

OTHEA'DED. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passion etc.

One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty, nor a hottheaded cockbrained excomb forward for a scheme of moderation.

Arbuthnot.

STHOUSE. n. f. [hot and house.]

A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.

Now she proteoles a hothouse, who has a very ill house too. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

A brothel.

Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,
A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,
Tells you it is a hothouse, but it may,
And still be a whorehouse: th' are synonyma.

Ben Jonson.

STLY. adv. [from hot.]

With heat; not coldly.

Violently; vehemently.

The stag was in the end to hotly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair. Sidney

I do contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,

As ever in ambitious strength I did

Contend against thy valour. Shakespeare

The enemy, now at hand, began hotly to skirmish in divers places with the christians.

Knot's History.

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute.

Boyle.

Lustfully.

Voracious birds, that hotly bill and breed,

And largely drink, because on salt they feed.

Dryden.

STMOUTHED. adj. [hot and mouth.]

Headstrong; ungovernable.

I fear my people's faith,

That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,

Hard to be broken. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

STNESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat;

violence; fury.

STSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]

A man violent, passionate, precipitate, and heady.

My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;

It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,

A harebram'd hotspur govern'd by a spleen.

Shakespeare.

Wars are begun by hairbrained dissolute captains, parasitical flatterers, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators.

Barton.

A kind of pea of speedy growth.

Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens,

the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth.

Montimer.

STSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.]

Vehement; rash; heady.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspur'd Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgment.

Peucham.

HOVEL. n. f. [diminutive of hope, house, Saxon.]

1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.

So likewise a hovel will serve for a roome,
To sticke on the peate, when harvest shall come

Tupper.

If you make a hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre.

Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd,

Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd.

Dryden.

2. A mean habitation; a cottage.

The men clamber up the acchities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such sorry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the summer.

Ray on the Creation.

To HOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To custer in a hovel.

And wast thou vain, poor father,

To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,

In th' off-musty straw? Shakespeare

HOVEN. part. pass. [from heave.] Raised;

swelled; tumefied.

Tom Piper bath hoven and puffed up cheeks;

If cheese be so hoven, make Cattle to seek creeks.

Tupper.

To HOVER. v. n. [horio, to hang over,

Welsh.]

1. To hang in the air overhead, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovels in the sky,

And pours down mischief. Shakespeare

Al, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!

If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,

And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,

Hover about me with your airy wings,

And bear your mother's lamentation. Shakespeare

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,

And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden

Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it. Addison

'Till as the earthly part decays and falls,

The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;

Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,

Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,

And thence with liberty unbounded flies,

Impatient to regain her native skies. Prior

Some lets remain'd, beneath the moon's pale

light,

Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night.

Pope

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hoveth in expectation of new worlds. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To wander about one place.

We see to warlike a prince at the head of a great army, hoving on the borders of our confederates. Addison

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possess'd itself of it; in the other, it only hoveth about it. Locke

HOUGH. n. f. [hog, Saxon.]

1. The lower part of the thigh.

Blood shall be from the sword into the belly,

and dung of men into the camel's hough. 2 Efd.

2. [hue, French.] An adz; a hoe. See

HOULT. n. f. [holt, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete.

On as the wind, in *hoult*s and shady greaves,

A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves.

Furter.

HOUND. n. f. [hund, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.

Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels,

currs,

Are cleft all by the name of dogs. Shakespeare

Jason threw, but fail'd to wound,

The hound, and flew an underfiring hound,

And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryden

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,

I shelt that fox in shape and species fond,

Patches the noted path and covets home. Prior

To HOULD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sit on the chafe.

God is fad to harden the heart permissively,

but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Branchall.

day; the space of sixty minutes.

See the minute how they run.

How many makes the hour full complicated,

How many hours bring about the day

How many days will flush about the year,

How many years a mortal man may live, Shakespeare

2. A particular time.

Excitation smelt tops my breath,

That tender'd friends greet in the hour of death.

Shakespeare.

When we can intreat an hour to live,

We'll spend it in some words upon that business,

If you would grant the time. Shakespeare

The conscious witch must all his wits reveal,

From the first moment of his vital breath,

To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakespeare

Our neighbour let his floor to a gentler man, who kept good hours. Trotter

They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison

HO'RGLOSS. n. f. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning better

by the hourglass than the day's sermons. Sedgwick

In tokens, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it: for the mind

doth value every moment. Bacon

Shake not his hourglass when his hairy hand

Is ebbing to the last. Dryden's Spanish Friar

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon

HO'RLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour; frequent; often repeated.

Alyone

Computes how many nights he had been gone.
O'er the warning moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden

We must be in hourly expectation of having a troop recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift

H O U R L Y, adv. [from hour] Every hour; frequently.

She defers a lord.

That two, with rude boys might tend upon,
And hour, call her mistress. Shakespeare

Our chate may not endure

Hazard to tear us, as doth hourly grow

Out of his inmates. Shakespeare's Hamlet

They with ceaseless cry

Surround me, as thou hast, hourly concern'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow intimate

To me. Milton's Paradise Lost

Great was their fire, which hourly was re-

new'd,

Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden

H O U R P L A T E, n. f. [hour and plate.]

The dial; the plate on which the hours, printed by the hand of a clock, are inscribed.

It ever could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that sentence. Locke

H O U S E, n. f. [hur, Saxon; huys, Dut.

huys, Scottish.]

1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.

Sparrows must not build in his house caves. Shakespeare

Houses are built to live in, not to look on;

therefore let us be preferred before uniformity,

except where both may be had. Bacon

In a house the doors are moveable, and the

The one just man alive, by his command,

Shall build a world's ark, as thou behest it,

To save himself and household from amidst

A world devote to universal wreck. Milton

He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and govern'd as a master; this is the proper household of faith: in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spenser

Great crimes must be with greater pains paid.

And second funerals on the former laid,

Let the whole household in one ruin lay.

And may Dame's curse o'ertake us all.
